Plants Studied For War Use

Warren Hastings, member of the production service and smaller war plants divisions of the war production board, Thursday began a study of Salem plants which might be used for war production. Surplus labor in this area makes it a place in which the government is anxious to make contracts, according to Hastings.

Features to be considered by the war production board are the capability of Salem plants to produce war materials, reliability of the companies, present volume of business, and efforts of war upon their financial status.

A preliminary inspection of this type was made earlier this week by John G. Barnard, Oregon representative of the WPB, his assistant, Mark Farnsworth, and Lee U. Eyerly, Frank Doerfler, Clay Cochran, and Carl Hogg, officials of the Salem chamber of commerce.
