

War Area Produce Needs To Be Talked

To help insure an adequate supply of fresh vegetables this season for Oregon's most critical war areas, Portland, Corvallis, and Medford, three vegetable growers' economic conferences have been arranged by the extension service of Oregon State college at the request of the state USDA war board. The conferences will be held at the chamber of commerce in Portland Friday, March 5; at Corvallis Tuesday, March 8, and in Medford Wednesday, March 10.

"The purpose of these conferences will be to estimate the demand for market vegetables in 1943, and to plan ways and means for getting the acreage needed to supply demands in those areas," says W. L. Teutsch, assistant director of extension.

"The market garden situation in these three regions is greatly affected by increased populations, caused by the influx of defense workers and armed forces, by the possibility of inadequate shipments of supplies from out-of-state sources, and by the rationing of all canned and dehydrated vegetables. While an increase in the number of home gardens will be an offsetting factor, difficulties will include shortages of fertilizers, insecticides, labor and transportation."

Leading market gardeners in the areas are being invited to attend the conferences and help work out a production program that will avoid serious vegetable shortages this season.

No More Poppy Seed, McKennon Reveals

Under recently enacted federal opium poppy control legislation, it is unlawful to grow opium poppies for the production of poppy seed and such activity will not be licensed, according to information received by Frank McKennon, chief of the plant division of the state department of agriculture, from the Seattle office of the bureau of narcotics.

This gives definite answer to queries from Oregon residents about the growing of opium poppies solely for poppy seed for sale to bakeries and similar places. The bureau of narcotics points out that licensing only of opium poppy production to supply medical and scientific needs for narcotic drugs is authorized under the act; and that, further, it is not now anticipated that any licenses will be issued as there is no immediate prospective need of the growth of opium poppies for even that purpose.

Union Oil Dealer Session Held Here

The yearly advertising meeting of Union Oil company employees and dealers was held on Thursday night at the Marion hotel conducted by P. H. Schnell, area manager.

"War service" as the chief source of revenue for oil dealers was emphasized. A feature of the program was a program on selling service station products, broadcast from KALE as one of many sent over the air to similar meetings up and down the Pacific coast.

E. C. Purvine is resident manager of the Union Oil company.
