Extension Service Offers Bulletins On Fruit Raising

As part of the food-for-victory series of publications from the extension service at OSC, two new Dies Thursday bulletins are recommended on small fruits for eastern and western Oregon. The bulletins are revisions, and to some extent expansions, of previous mimeographed circulars on this subject. Extension bulletin 617 deals with small fruits for eastern Oregon, while $18 is devoted to fruits for home gardens west of the Cascades.

"Home garden small fruit plantings are more important than ever because of war-time changes in production, consumption, and disproduction, consumption, and distribution of food crops," says O. T. McWhorter, extension horticulturist, in an introductory statement. "It may become more and more difficult and costly to obtain small fruits for home use during the war. Small fruit plantings may become a part of home gardens where there is space for them and time for their care."

While one cannot get as quick second place club in the regularresults with fruit as with garden vegetables, strawberries will bear full crops the next year after being set and some varieties, particularly everbearing, may produce some the first season. Cane fruits bear lightly the second year after ting and come into full bearing the third and following years.

West Salem Offers Lots for Gardens

WEST SALEM - The city of West Salem now owns 20 acres of the 50 acres of land known as the Murphy tract. This land is available for victory gardens. Anyone wishing a garden lot should apply to chief of police or to the property control committee. Last year the city bought ten acres of this tract and this year another ten acres and now holds an option on the remaining 30 acres.
