What's your name and home town?

Good reporting includes getting names and addresses whether on a local police story or the greatest war in history.

Associated Press war correspondents thus never overlook an opportunity to bring the name of a home town boy to the attention of his community.

Take the experience of AP reporter Murlin Spencer. He went up to the fighting front in New Guinea to check on the exploits of a man named "Jager, or something like that." He finally found Thomas Jager of Greenville, Mich., got all the details for his story.

A little later Spencer found himself crouched in a shell hole with two dead Japs just as the Americans started an artillery barrage. He saw a soldier poised to heave a grenade at a Jap pill-box.

"What's your name and home town?" Spencer shouted.

"He looked at me as though I was crazy," Spencer wrote, but the soldier shouted back that he was Robert Amans of Superior, Wis.

Then he let fly of the Japs and the soldier and the reporter both dropped flat as the shells whined over their heads.

Mid-Americans Make Meat Pie, Too

Here are two interesting ways to use left-overs in tropical middle American style. One and a half cups of meat will stretch abundantly to serve four—using either recipe—and that's a trick well worth knowing these days.

The Mexican specialty is a brilliantly colorful, easily prepared one-dish meal. The other recipe is a Spanish version of our well known shepherd's pie, but while we make our shepherd's pie in a casserole with the mashed potatoes piled on top, the countries in middle America usually make theirs in a shallow dish like a pie plate. The potatoes are mashed with a little less milk than we ordinarily use and are then pressed into place in the pie plate just the way we make a Graham cracker pie crust.

Gravies, as we know them, are rarely made, so where we would use left-over gravy with our meat, the middle American housewife moistens hers with a little tomato sauce made by simmering crushed tomatoes with spices in a little garlic flavored fat.

Its differences like this that make our relationship with middle America so interesting. The ten middle American countries are our closest neighbors; they are the home of the luscious and nutritious banana and many other foods which we cannot grow in our temperate climate; they are our democratic allies in this war; they want the goods which we can produce, and they have the manpower we need for production of their important crops. North Americans and middle Americans are, indeed, very close in spirit and aims. It is the differences in traditions, customs, and daily living that add the spice of human interest—differences that are well illustrated in the little nuances and tricks of cooking.

When making our attractive new Mexican specialty, use fresh tomatoes rather than canned, as they look so much prettier. Then when the dish is ready to serve, arrange the meat and vegetables on a platter exactly as directed. The whole thing is as gorgeous and colorful as a middle American serape.

MEXICAN SPECIALTY
3 fresh tomatoes
1 onion
1 green pepper
1 tablespoon fat
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/2 teaspoon pepper
1 1/2 cups diced cooked pork or veal
1 cup stock or
1 bouillon cube and
1 cup hot water
2 cups corn
2 cups green beans, cooked
Mash tomatoes thoroughly with a fork and grate onion, or put both through the grinder. Add the green pepper finely chopped. Melt fat in skillet, add the tomato mixture and seasonings. Simmer fifteen minutes. Add the diced meat and the stock, and simmer gently, uncovered, for one hour. At serving time, pile meat along center of platter and arrange corn on one side and string beans on the other, or surround the meat mixture with alternate piles of beans and corn. Serves 4.

BROILED PLATTER
1 pound beef liver
4 tablespoons salad oil
1 garlic clove
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/2 teaspoon pepper

Dip liver in oil in which garlic has soaked 5 minutes. Discard the garlic before adding liver. Sprinkle with seasonings and place on greased shallow baking pan. Broil 5 minutes, turn and cook other side. Add vegetables.

VEGETABLES
4 large cooked carrots
4 thick onion slices
2 tablespoons butter or margarine (melted)
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/2 teaspoon paprika
4 thick apple slices
2 tablespoons honey
1 tablespoon lemon juice
1/2 teaspoon cinnamon

Arrange carrots and onions on liver. Brush with butter and sprinkle with salt and paprika. Place apple slices around the sides of the dish and spread slices with honey mixed with juice and cinnamon. Add 1/4 cup water and broil 10 minutes. Baste several times with drippings in baking dish.

Broth Rationed? Yes... No

This seeming paradox is found on the two sides of the new point rationing charts which every food retailer is to display. On the processed foods side of the chart, bouillon cubes are included in the list of items not rationed. On the meat point side, bouillon cubes are listed at seven points (incidentally, seven points a pound, and a pound of bouillon cubes would probably last until the next world war).

The difference, OPA explains, is that the bouillon cubes referred to on the processed foods side are vegetable bouillon cubes, while the cubes on the meat side are beef cubes.
