Maas Proposes Master Plan To Run War

WASHINGTON, April 1-(AP)—A "master war plan," providing that the entire war program—manpower, procurement and production as well as military strategy and operation—shall be cleared through the joint chiefs of staff, was proposed Thursday by Rep. Maas (R-Minn).

Ranking minority member of the house naval committee and a flying colonel in the marine corps reserve, he announced he would introduce legislation to coordinate the various war activities.

"We may win the war with our present confused, complicated and conflicting bureaucracy," he said in a statement, "but if we do, it will be in spite of rather than because of it."

"Under my bill, production would still be handled by civilians and the economy of the nation would not be turned over to the military, but the final decision upon the balances program, as it affects the conduct and operation of the war, would rest with the joint chiefs of staff."

He contended this would "eliminate such fundamental conflicts as the rubber program versus high octane gasoline and escort vessels. The number of escort vessels to be built and the schedule of their completion and going into service vitally affects not only military operations but the grand over-all military strategy of the war."
