LINCOLN—Miss Barbara Dike Polk county health nurse, was the principal speaker on the program at the Spring Valley Home Missionary society for which Mrs. H. J. Neiger, Mrs. C. F. Merrick and Mrs. Lois Crawford were hostesses at the Neiger country home, April 1. Statistics show that as a general rule the farm family is not so well nourished as those living in the city, said Miss Dike.

Miss Dike, who has had personal experience in canning foods, digressed here to give a helpful review on summer canning and a few important factors that might be overlooked during the rush of the canning season. First of all, she said, you are fortunate to be living in a rural area where you can have gardens, because the more quickly you can get the foods canned after they come from the garden, the higher they will be in the necessary food elements.

The committee on food and nutrition of the national research council has written a dietary pattern to meet the recommended allowances. Written with the present food situation in mind, it has given a pattern very similar to the one we are accustomed to. "The main difference," said Miss Dike, being the allowance for milk for children, 1 1/2 pints to one quart is adequate. It is important to see that the child does not get more than this amount, not only will it spoil his appetite for other foods he needs, but an amount of milk over and above one quart will not be efficiently assimilated by the body. Another difference in the new pattern is eggs, pointed out Miss Dike. One or two eggs, served three or four times a week is now considered sufficient. This change probably will not have to be considered in this area where eggs are plentiful.

The advertisements given to oranges for the high vitamin C content can be matched and raised by our strawberry patch. Oranges contain 48 units of vitamin C to one half cup of juice and strawberries have 60 units in 12 berries. They also have a higher content of vitamin B2 and iron," the speaker said. Citrus fruits may be substituted by tomatoes.

Miss Dike, health nurse in the northeast section of the county, said in speaking of her work with school children, I have seen spectacular physical and mental improvement in the schools that I visit that serve hot lunches. Preceding Miss Dike's talk Mrs. Elwood Cooper, president, presided at the meeting when the Easter theme was emphasized in devotionals and group singing for which Mrs. Ralph H. Scott was pianist. Mrs. W. W. Henry, Mrs. Ralph C. Shepard, Mrs. C. M. Purvine reported on the sick and charitable committees. A round table discussion on ways and means of adding to the general fund of the club, which is used principally for shut-ins, invalids and indigents, was held. The group will sponsor a chicken pie supper at the Zena school house, April 30.

The committee appointed to make all arrangements was Mrs. Elwood Cooper, Mrs. W. W. Henry, Mrs. Milton Stephens, Mrs. Ben McKinney, Mrs. Ralph H. Scott.

Officers stationed at the army air base, fairgrounds, and Camp Adair have been invited to the dance, and a group of Salem girls will be hostesses to the bachelor officers attending. Informal and sports attire will be worn by guests attending the dance, and hours are from 9 to 1 o'clock. Changes Felt With Rationing

By MAXINE BUREN
Familiarity with rationing has taken away much of the fear we felt for it. A few months ago we thought gasoline rationing would just about break our hearts, a few weeks ago we sincerely believed that food rationing would change our mode of life from something pleasant to complete unhappiness.

But we found the change not too awfully bad, life is going on about the same as usual, except that discussion food and red stamps displace talking about the weather and the war, and we've long needed a change of conversation anyway.

Although war has brought such a large number of adjustments at home, it certainly hasn't eliminated our social activities completely. Most of the city's social life is now made up of small parties, a table of bridge, a dinner with two or four invited, an afternoon of sewing with tea served later.

Refreshments sort of slipped into a new place, since we frankly must be careful of what we serve, and many housewives have found it a relief to be able to serve really simple food, just as a sort of bonus for the guests. Elaborate afternoon or evening refreshments were beginning to bore many hostesses anyway.

One luncheon club now serves salad and tea because fresh fruits or vegetables take no points at all, a salad dressing takes a few but tea is still a ration free beverage. Cinnamon toast and tea is a fine afternoon refreshment, and most people like cinnamon toast. Women have plenty of sugar for such refreshments as this and anyway many guests insist on bringing their own sugar, even over the polite protests of the hostess. However in case of small parties, a hostess one week will be a guest the next, so it all evens up pretty well.

Recently I asked one woman who entertains a lot, how she was managing for a dinner party she planned.

"We'll use what points we need for the dinner," she said, "and the family will get along nicely for the rest of the week on point-free foods, that's easily done."

Yet another said her guests had been so generous in bringing along coffee and sugar lately, that she was away ahead on these. There's one very nice thing about rationing, whatever you serve (or if you don't serve anything at all) it is all right with your guests. War times, like those we went through during the depression years, develop tolerance, which makes for far better understanding and deeper friendships. We Americans need a good hard jolt every once in a while.
