Wool Needs Tenderest Care

By MAXINE BUREN

Wool is mighty nice if you can get it, and if you do have some real woolen garments, better do your best to save them for long wear.

The government, warning us that with 200 pounds of fleece wool going into equipment and clothing for every doughboy, we simply must guard the woolens we have like treasures. Keep wool clean, give it air, mend it in time, don't shock it, and protect it from moths. Protect woolen dresses from perspiration by using shields. Coats should be unbuttoned when the wearer is sitting, it lessens the strain. A scarf keeps the collar clean and makes wool wear longer. If possible, wool garments should rest a day or so between wearings; it does a lot for the length of usefulness of the wool, and a good brushing is good for them too. Keep them clean, sending to the cleaner frequently and airing often. The airing not only freshens woolen clothes in appearance, but it discourages the

Keep the wool clothing mended. You can get assorted wool mending swatches at the fiveand-ten. When the cloth gets to looking worn, mend it before it goes clear through.

Wool is sensitive, as are all other animal materials. When washing wool, use only lukewarm water and take care not to change the temperature between washing and rinsing waters. Hard rubbing or wringing is hard on the wools and makes them stiff and hard.

Take care not to use any bleaches using chlorine, it destroys them. Sponge a grease spot carefully with an approved solvent, laying the stain face down on a brush and brushing lightly, beginning at the outside of the stain.

Sometimes light grease will come off when sprinkled with talcum powder or cornstarch. Brush off.
