

Books Listed For Good Reading

Arranged in the entrance alcove of the public library, under a color reproduction of a madonna praying painted by the 15th century Italian artist, Fra Filippo Lippi, is a display of books suggested for Lenten reading. The selections cover a wide range of subject matter, but the attitudes of understanding, friendship, peace and spiritual inspiration in keeping with the Easter season are predominant in them and readers will find the list handy for post-Easter reference.

Included in the display, among other volumes are: Fossdick, H. E. Successful Christian Living. The teachings of Jesus interpreted and applied to the problems and needs of the human race, by a popular religious leader.

Rush, Benjamin. Road to Fulfillment. A summary of the spiritual laws quoted from the Bible, and if followed by man, should bring him to religious fulfillment.

Spence, Hartzell. One Foot in Heaven. The biography of a practical person.

Lin Yutang. Importance of Living. A revealing and personal guide to the Chinese philosophy of life.

Link, H. C. The Rediscovery of Man. A vigorous defense of man as a creature of free will and untold possibilities, not the slave of environment or circumstance.

Chase, Stuart. The Road We Are Traveling. A noted economist reviews the trends that must be considered in planning for a better world "when the war ends."

Martin, Herbert. A Philosophy of Friendship. A philosopher revolts against intellectual anarchy and makes a plea for a sympathetic outlook and appreciation of the peoples of the world.

Mumford, Lewis. Faith for Living. A humanitarian revolts against barbarism and moral disintegration of our world, and pleads for a humane and stable society.

McWilliams, Cary. Brothers Under the Skin. A western sociologist revolts against race discrimination, and offers suggestions for the solution of the problem.

Husky Box Lunch Is Fashion

By MAXINE BUREN
The lunchbox, symbol of the workman, still remains the symbol, but it means that the holder may be anything from a bank clerk to a school teacher. Now-a-days, wherever men and women work, there will be lunchboxes eaten on the premises, from boxes or sacks.

Increasing number of housewives feel that their husbands and daughters will be better fed under present down-town eating conditions, if a well balanced lunch is put up for them. Men and office women, because "it's being done," feel no hesitation in carrying a lunch box or paper sack these days.

And the restaurant men are delighted, for the first time in their lives, most of them need less customers.

Sandwiches should no longer be the only food in the box lunch, although they are grand to provide substance and give a well filled feeling. Variation of sandwiches will be dependent upon the diners' favorites. The fillings should be substantial, and a generous amount of filling used. Lettuce, either ground and mixed with olives, mayonnaise or pickles are filling centers.

Peanut butter, especially the kind that has chunks of the peanuts, provide wonderful food value and are popular with diners.

If the diner likes lettuce in his sandwich, wrap leaves up in waxed paper and let him put them in the sandwich later, as the lettuce wilts on standing very long in the bread.

Salad sandwiches will be even more popular this summer than in the spring, chopped meats mixed with crisp celery, pickles and mayonnaise, chopped hard cooked eggs with chopped olives (you can get olives chopped in cans, ready to mix in spread).

As to the remaining part of the lunch, remember to make just as much variety in the meals as you would for lunch at home. Salads in screw top jars, canned or fresh fruit for dessert, something crisp like carrot lices or celery, make the luncheon attractive.

Drinks include soup on hot days, coffee, milk or in warm weather, cold fruit juice or punch. A bottle of pop is a good beverage.
Something sweet is always needed, or the diner feels that something's lacking. Cookies, a cup cake, or a piece of candy will complete his lunch.

Color, Form In Menu Important

By MAXINE BUREN
This is going to be a vegetable plate year.

The lady of the house will find herself the village heroine, if she works up a local reputation for herself and her vegetable plates. She'll remember a few simple rules if she's clever.

On these plates will be variety in color, form and texture. And, oh yes, the food should be well cooked and flavored.

But to win over a diner, one must first offer good looking food, the flavor will pretty well take care of itself, but serve the best food in the world, without a nice appearance, and the battle's lost.

This adventurer in vegetable plates must recall her third grade art lessons, the one when we learned that complementary colors compliment each other? They still do. A reasonably green vegetable turns the brightest of color when it's decorated with a bit of red. And in reverse, a red food takes on a bright hue when it's garnished with green.

WATCH SHAPES
We've talked about variety of shapes many times on these pages but never more seriously than in the same breath with vegetable plates. For instance, a plate full of all flat foods has far less interest than if a taller, say baked potato, is set alongside. A mound of spinach will add height to the arrangement, a chunk of lettuce the same.

BOTH HOT AND COLD

Change of temperature, too, adds interest. No matter how hot the day, the diners will find one hot thing in the meal welcome. Same with a cold day, all hot foods make the plate a dull course. A bite into a cool salad is refreshing during the hot menu, so a baked potato or a serving of hot Spanish rice goes well with an otherwise cold menu.

Think of the plate dinner as a whole, think of it first as a picture, then break it down into individual foods, and your success as a builder of vegetable plates will be assured.
