Don't Look Now...

But... so far this year we haven't seen a sign of those poor little green and pink chickens up for sale to adorning children. The war's done one thing for the baby chick anyway, they now are allowed to grow up to become stew, instead of being put to an early death by too-loving hands.

Blossom day... although the Cherrims and the mayor didn't proclaim it, there'll always be a blossom day. Use a little precious gasoline to take a carload full of friends or family and see the sights. Drive slowly, and you'll have a lovely afternoon.

Change of heart... What's become of the man who only a month ago couldn't use a drop of gasoline for pleasure driving? He's probably out fishing, -- using the gas he saved when mamma wanted the car.

Slightly salty... We have an item about Carolyn Brown's enlistment in the WAVES and another telling of a concert she's going to sing next Friday. All right Carolyn, but we'll be expecting a few sea chanteys mixed in with your Bach and Schubert.

It's a promise... The OWP promises us better wearing stockings, but we won't believe it until we've snagged one.

Pretty severe... Winston Taylor, recently enlisted member of The Statesman staff, who as a Willamette university student has been active in church circles and was director of youth activities of the First Methodist church, was meted out a pretty severe punishment for a minor stepping of rules at Ft. Lewis, so thought the top sergeant. He made Winston go to church!

Museum piece... We know a woman who has a can of corned beef. Remember corned beef? Or maybe you're too young
