Sandwich Shift

Most Homemakers are on it. Here are some ideas for fillings

By MAXINE BUREN
If you're on the sandwich shift (whether it's picnic, tea or the buskiet of worker's favorites) you'll probably welcome a few suggestions for variety. Half the sandwich's success is in the bread, and if you'll vary the bread, you'll make as many kinds of sandwiches.

Just good old nut bread, made at home and spread with butter will be a very welcome addition to the lunch, and other breads will do too. Take bran honey bread, old fashioned brown bread, orange bread and this one we haven't tried yet but intend to try soon.

RAISIN SPICE BREAD
½ cup shortening
¼ tablepoons sugar
¼ cup corn syrup
2 egg yolks
2 cups cake flour
3 tablepoons baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon ginger
¼ teaspoon cinnamon or all-spice
¾ cup milk
¼ cup seedless raisins
2 egg whites
Cream shortening, sugar and ¼ cup corn syrup thoroughly. Add egg yolks, one at a time, beating well after each. Sift together flour, baking powder, salt and spices; add alternately with milk to creamed mixture, beating well. Add raisins. Beat egg whites stiff; add remaining syrup gradually, beating until mixture holds shape. Fold into batter. Pour into greased loaf pan 8½x4½x3 inches. Bake in moderate oven (350 degrees) 80 minutes. Cool.

Butter is really enough for these sweet breads, but your fancy fillings between plain bread.

Recalling our youthful favorites, we recommend graham or bran muffins and butter, to be served cold as part of the lunch. We personally like cold baking powder biscuits with orange marmalade.

As to filling for just bread, let's go over some of the ideas suggested by a well known writer of food stories.

She suggests:

Raw vegetable filling, using raw carrots, green pepper and cauliflower. (We'll take it in our lunch box carton and eat it with a spoon.)

Fruit nut fillings, chopped nuts, dried figs and prunes. (Makes a good dessert sandwich to finish off the lunch.)

Liver and onion filling, using mustard, ground cooked liver, ground or chopped onion and mayonnaise (Good for liver eaters—makes a filling and flavorful filling.)

Chopped, hard cooked eggs and kidneys with mayonnaise. (All right, but any meat will do.)

Chopped green peppers and minced ham. (Good to look at and mighty good to eat, too. Some women like to toast the long bread fingers on one side, turn 'em over and cover with this filling, then toast and serve either hot or cold.)

Cucumber slices. (Excellent when you are sure of the cucumbers. Make them open faced for the afternoon tea guests, nice and thick and juicy for the worker's lunches.)

Butter is really enough for these sweet breads, but your fancy fillings between plain bread.
