Picnic Time Will Begin Monday

By MAXINE BUREN Officially, Monday is the opening of the picnic season, and Oregonians will never let a week and curtailed gasoline supplies keep them from eating outdoors with the family, uncles, aunts and ants.

Some, of course, will go to the beach or mountains, staying longer periods, instead of making many short stays throughout the summer.

Backyards of Salem and vicinity will be busy places this year, for we Westerners have already come to consider our yards as summer living rooms, and we'll find them even more pleasant this year than ever before.

Many neighbors have arranged their yards to be thrown into one larger space, where several families in the block can enjoy meals and recreation together.

If one home boasts a barbecue pit or fireplace, all members of the party can eat at that spot, while another yard with perhaps a croquet court will form the recreation place for the youngsters, while a third might be reserved for the older folk.

Community eating, playing and living will probably be one of the good things that come out of the war, for neighborliness is already evident, and is fast increasing. Victory garden patches, with many families sharing the same small acreage, are proving that neighbors can get along, and that it's more fun when several families work together.

If you are planning to add to your outdoor living quarters this summer, check on what the neighbor is doing, and if possible, make your ideas conform.

Monday will be a good day to make definite plans for this summer's hours spent in the back yard, making it an opening event.
