Students to Study Music In Vacation

This summer instrumental music, bands and orchestras will be a regular part of the summer playground activities. There are over 500 young people in Salem who play musical instruments. They will be able to continue this worthwhile study during the summer months and assist in the civic and patriotic functions that come up during the summer.

Many of the younger students cannot work in the fields in summer and these morning music groups will furnish them with a fine opportunity to either begin playing a musical instrument or continue their previous study. Any young person in the city of Salem may enter these music classes.

Because many of the older students of junior high school and high school age will be working in the fields in the day time the program is arranged so that this group may attend in evening groups. There is no charge for any of the music classes and all music and stands are furnished. New and interesting music is studied during the summer.

Practices will start Monday in the high school music room at the southwest corner of the senior high building. Vernon L. Wiscason, instrumental supervisor of the Salem schools, will be the instructor in charge of all groups.

All students of band and orchestra instruments are urged to attend these groups. There will be classes for all students regardless of their advancement and ability.

YWCA Smith Creek Play Camp Caters to 'Teen Age Pleasure

The YWCA play camp at Smith Creek, beginning today should meet some of the needs of 'teen-age workers. When and how to relax in these days of war and work form the foundation of the week's program for high schools girls. The schedule is planned to avoid hurry or pressure so girls who have worked before camp or plan to work later can have a week of rest and relaxation. The camp will be self-governed by a council chosen by and from the campers.
