pretty much of a record. Take a drive through a cut over field some day, and stir up a family of quaits, at least two dozen frightened little things will run wildly out. I'm reminded of a time when the father of such a brood, flew at our approaching car with his wings out, making harrid faces, as if to frighten us. He took his own life in his hands to protect his brood. He didn't know that we were only approaching slowly to that we were only approaching slowly to see just how long he would try to block our way. We finally gave up, for he had more nerve than we.

Believe it or not . . . but this really happened. The mother of a serviceman, visiting from the east, kept her windows locked and curtained the first few night of her visit here, because she was atraid of the Indians. It is also revealed that when she saw such large cherries, she thought they must be hot house ones . . .
