Garden Space Saved When Vines of Cucumbers Climb on Trellis

In small victory gardens much space can be saved by growing cucumbers as climbing vines rather than as ramblers. They are so grown in great greenhouse plants about the country devoted entirely to the winter market. In these glass houses the cucumbers are trained to strings and go straight up to the roofs.

They may be easily grown in the home garden in this manner. A sunny back porch may have cucumbers as shade producing vines and it is as attractive in appearance as some vines that are grown as ornaments. The vine will climb quickly if given support and will produce just as abundantly in an upright position which is its natural method of growth, being provided with tendrils for climbing. Often cucumbers on the edge of a corn planting will seize upon a cornstalk as support.

Six-foot trellises can be made at home to accommodate the vines very easily and when they reach the top they can be pinched back to be kept in bounds. When grown to upright supports as climbers the problem of furnishing them with moisture in hot weather is much easier to handle than when they sprawl about the ground. They can be given a mulch or trenches can be dug a foot away from the vines on either side of the row to be filled with water to soak into the soil.

Cucumbers like a good soil but reveal in one of fairly light texture which is easily worked provided it can be furnished with a supply of moisture. The time to give cucumbers their heavy feeding is at the start of their career. Apply plant food at the rate of one level tablespoonful to one square foot of soil. It is not needed so much in their late career. It is possible to get so much nitrogen into the soil in the way of humus and fertilizer that the plant will run too luxuriously to leaf and vine. If the vine seems to be running too heavily pinch out the ends of the principal shoot and head it back to blossoming and fruiting. Always pick the first cucumber promptly to encourage the vine to bring on the rest of the family.

Sage Advice on Salt Subject

Salt will play an important part in canning this year and it may be that you will brine some of your victory garden crop.

Salt manufacturers provide a salt especially for large commercial canners, but the home canner will not go wrong in using her regular package of table salt at home. The only difference is that all table salts contain a slight amount of material which keeps them free-running in damp weather. This is, of course, perfectly harmless, or it would not be used. However, when much salt is employed, as in preparing pickles, this added ingredient may stay in suspension for a short time, and produce a very slight cloudiness in the brine. It will have no effect whatever on the quality or the taste of your food.

For all ordinary canning, the amount of salt used is so small that the free-flowing material in the table salt will not even be noticed.

Leading commercial canners, recognizing the importance of salt in the finished product, use salt tablets of various sizes to insure uniformity and to facilitate handling. Using table salt, the housewife can flavor to her family's taste by using from 1 1/4 level teaspoonful of salt for a quart of string, stringless or wax beans, tomatoes, turnip greens, okra, asparagus, succotash, beets, pimientos and mixed vegetables. A quart of tomatoes will take from 1/2 to 3/4 level teaspoonful of salt, and a quart of tomato juice from 3/8 to 1 level teaspoonful.
