Priests Join Blood Donors

Mr. Angel Surpasses Quota of 150 When Truck Arrives

MT. ANGEL—Among the 200 Mt. Angel people who volunteered to donate a pint of blood to the American Red Cross mobile blood donor service were 20 religious men from Mt. Angel college and seminary. The monks were among the 150, maximum number that could be handled in the four-hour space allotted, whose blood was taken Friday, July 30, at St. Mary's school. The staff of doctors and nurses who came with the blood truck began work at 9:30 a. m.

The college has always come to the fore in all the drives for service to men and country, whether it was money or labor that was asked, nor did they shirk at giving their own blood.

When Mt. Angel was notified that blood donors were wanted by the Red Cross, the request was to have people come to Salem and give their blood there. Because of travel difficulties and the naturally busy season in a farming community, it was suggested that the blood truck be brought to Mt. Angel. The Red Cross readily agreed, provided 120 people promised to donate blood. A quota of 150 was then set and surpassed.

Sylvester Schmitt, Red Cross chairman, was general chairman. Registration of the donors was held at the Farmers Union Warehouse, with Miss Marie Medina in charge, and at Fisher's pharmacy, where Leonard Fisher took care of the registering.

Mrs. Frank Aman headed the committee of women who were at the school Friday serving coffee and refreshments to the donors and Mrs. Sylvester Schmitt was in charge of the registration committee.

The 20 cots needed for the patients were donated by the college.

Pringle School Engages New Principal

PRINGLE—Miss Ruth Porterfield of Salem has been employed as principal at the Pringle school for the coming year, succeeding Mrs. Clara Girod who is moving to Washington county. A picnic in compliment to Mrs. Girod was held on the school grounds Saturday.

Mrs. Margaret Meyer, who has been principal in the Hebo district in Tillamook county, has been employed as teacher for the intermediate room at Pringle. She is a graduate of Cheney's College of Education in Washington. Mrs. Margaret Wiley will remain as teacher in the primary department.

New she is still working for the Red Cross, and two afternoons a week finds her in the

Presenting Personalities

ALBANY—Ninety years is a long time to look forward to but looking back that many years, it does not seem so long according to Mrs. Emeline Bray, who is celebrating the 90th anniversary of her birth today.

Born in Sterling, Ill., August 3, 1853, Mrs. Bray's life has spanned the beginning and end of three wars, and is now witnessing another, the end of which the aged woman prays for daily.

Mrs. Bray's ancestors came to the United States from Holland and settled in New York, where they took up land, later yielding out the city of Schenectady. One of these brothers was the father of Nicholas Jacob Vrooman, who in turn became the father of the woman of this sketch, Nicholas Vrooman married Julia Lewis, a native of Pennsylvania. They moved to Illinois following their marriage and it was there that Emeline was born, and was named for her mother's twin sister. Her mother died when she was very young.

It was while on a visit to the home of a brother in Iowa that she met John Bray and became engaged to him. They were married in Clarence, Mo., to which city her father had moved. For several years afterwards they lived in Clarence, then decided to come to Oregon. The trip west was made in 1888. In the party were Mr. and Mrs. Bray, their family and Mrs. Bray's father, Nicholas Vrooman, who had remarried, and who had two stepdaughters, Mrs. Ann Richards and Mrs. Mary Brink, living in Albany.

Since then, Mrs. Bray has made her home continuously in this city. Her father has long since been dead, as also Mr. Bray, both step-sisters, and her own two daughters.

In talking about war, in which Mrs. Bray takes a strong interest, she recalled how during the Civil war, she walked down town with her father who went daily to the post office, which in those days was a general place for getting news, and of saying to her father, "Pa, do they always have to have war?" and her father replied, "Little girl, always, somewhere, there is war."

In speaking of war, Mrs. Bray says she has really done Red Cross work in each of the wars. Although very young at the time of the Civil war, she told how the older women of the community would get calico, or as they called it, "prints" and would tear it in squares. Then these squares were given the girls the age of Mrs. Bray, or a little older, to hem, because in that long-ago day, small girls learned while very young, to not only sew, but to do many other household tasks. Later these squares of prints were sent to the boys in blue to be used for handkerchiefs.

Then came the Spanish-American war during which Mrs. Bray knit socks for the boys in the service. Next was world war one, when the Red Cross not only knit socks, but scarves, and caps for the soldiers.

Now she is still working for the Red Cross, and two afternoons a week finds her in the sewing rooms where she has a task of sewing on buttons and tapes, and other of the easier tasks. She not only walks to the Red Cross sewing rooms from her home, a distance of four blocks, but climbs a steep stairway to the rooms.

While she usually carries a cane, "because" she says, "sometimes she gets a trifle dizzy," she does not depend upon its use to any great extent. Seldom during the past winter has she missed an afternoon at the sewing rooms, even when inclement weather kept many of the younger workers away.

At the age of 17 years, Mrs. Bray joined the Methodist church, although her father told her it was not necessary as she had been christened when a baby. But she told him she could not remember that and she wanted to be sure. Since then she has taken an active part in the work of the church.

She has for many years also been an active member in the Ladies of the Grand Army, but since the present war she does not attend so often due to their meetings being held on a Tuesday afternoon which interferes with her work for the Red Cross. She is also a member of the Women's Christian Temperance Union.

Mrs. Bray's husband served during the Civil war, being in an Illinois company. Now she has a grandson, Richard Ray, in the present war.

Asked what her chief hobby was, Mrs. Bray said she had several, among them crochet, tatting, and applique, the latter being used on quilts. Of these, she has made a good many. She made blocks enough and gave the Red Cross, also has made several for other purposes, the emergency civilian hospital, and the Methodist church missionary society, and for each of her grandchildren.

Mrs. Bray makes her home with her son, Claude, and delights in having visitors. She has many pictures, books and other keepsakes of her early life, which she enjoys showing and telling about to friends. Her husband died a number of years ago, as did her daughter, Miss Ethel Bray, who was a teacher in the Albany schools and schools of Linn county for many years. Another daughter, Mollie, died after the family came to Albany, and two other children, a boy and a girl, died in Missouri in infancy. Mrs. Bray has two grandchildren living and two great grandchildren.

Tuesday afternoon, open house is being held in the Red Cross sewing rooms to honor the aged woman, and her many friends are being invited to call on her there.

Visits Grandparents AUMSVILLE—Donald Mountain of Portland is spending a week at the home of his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. T. C. Mountain.
