Oregon producers and packers were given slaughter quota increases for 20,000 additional lambs and an unlimited lend-lease market outlet for frozen, telescoped lamb carcasses, the food distribution administration announced last week.

Increases are being granted at the request of stockmen in the Willamette valley and west coast counties in Oregon, who have contended that existing quotas preevnted them from marketing large numbers of lambs, particularly commercial and utility grades, Merritt A. Clevenger, Pacific region director of the FDA, said. All slaughterers except farm
