Retires to Elkhorn

Come September and Kenneth Randall will take off his badge as deputy sheriff to move to his ranch at Elkhorn, near where Elkhorn creek joins the Little North Fork of the Santiam. No more registering of small-time criminals; no more collection of fees and fines; no more thumbing over processes; no more keeping of sheriff's office records. Randall is going right up to the "edge of cultivation,"-a little beyond the edge, some would say; and there at the bend of the road above Elkhorn bridge, where the foothills enclose Elkhorn flat he and his wife will make their home.

The life of Reily, if you please, after years of work-serving the public at the old state house lunch counter, and serving the public in the county sheriff's office. No more serving anybody, just salting his cattle, raising a garden, and watching nature run through the cycle of the seasons.

Kenneth can sit on his porch and watch the laughing waters of the Little North Fork as they bounce their way over the rocks. He can look across Elkhorn flat and see the morning sun light up the sheer face of House mountain; or at night can see the sun sink behind itthe mountain on whose table the Indians built their fires and played their games. To the east rise the Cascades, and the road winds up into the old mining country, past the Pearl Creek ranger station, where the forest gate bars the road and where at the spring house you can get a drink of the finest water the mountains afford. The forest road runs past Silver King mine, and Black Eagle mine, and the old workings of the Santiam Mining company, on up Battle Axe creek through the Amalgamated mine property to the base of Battle Axe mountain itself, where the pass leads down to Elk lake. Humbug creek and Breitenbush river. And if he wants to climb a mountain there's Henline mountain to the northeast where he can stretch his muscles and get a broad view of the lands where his cattle graze. There are deer in the hills too; and in August salmon fill the pools of the stream waiting for the signal of instinct to do their spawning on the gravel It's a great country up Elkhorn way, where the mountains are gentled into foothills, where winter brings its silences and summer the mellow warmth of midday and the cooling breeze drawing up the valley at eventide; a fit place for a man to retire to, after he has been a deputy sheriff, a place where he can rest or work, can sit and dream, or just sit. Randall will probably do all of them.

South American Novelist

An Argentine novelist, Max Dickmann, has been visiting the United States under the sponsorship of Nelson Rockefeller's organization for inter-American affairs. Dickmann has written several novels and many short stories dealing with South American life, and he has translated into Spanish many works by North American authors. He sees in literature one medium for promoting good neighborliness. Also he thinks that Argentine motion pictures should be permitted entry into the United States. The bar is probably not a legal one, but rather unwillingness of theaters to exhibit foreign films, because of their close tie-up with American producing companies.

If we are to build permanently better relations with other countries in the western hemisphere we will need to have a better understanding of their history and their culture. That calls for travel, for reading, for broader knowledge of Spanish language (and Portuguese for Brazil) so that reading and conversation may be done in the language of the southern

South America has an old culture, stemming straight from Spain and Portugal. Its cities, particularly Buenos Aires and Rie de Janiero are progressive and modern. Some very original modern architecture has been developed in Brazil. In Buenos Aires is published one of the greatest newspapers in the world, La Prenza, with an enormous circulation.

North Americans can well afford to learn the Spanish language, and when opportunity permits, travel through the countries of Central and South America. They will find primitive conditions in many parts, but they will see an emerging civilization, where countries are trying to catch up with the advance of the more restless and adventurous people of the United States and Canada. Nelson Rockefeller and his group are doing a great deal of good in encouraging closer relations based on fuller acquaintanceship with the Latin American countries.

Himmler, the Policeman

Adolph Hitler is still boss of the reich, no matter who may be determining military strategy or who may be in actual command of the armies, it is Hitler who is still on top. That is proven by the announcement that Hitler has appointed Heinrich Himmler, head of the gestapo, as minister of the interior and chief of the reich administration. This puts into the hands of this brutal lieutenant of der Fuehrer's full authority for maintaining order within Germany. It is Hitler's move to anticipate possible outbreaks such as those which make miserable the lives of his officers and soldiers stationed in the occupied countries.

It is safe to conclude that this action reveals a growing tension within Germany. The only reports of unrest have come from Hamburg and some of the other heavily bombed cities. But Hitler wants no such rioting as occurs in the cities of northern Italy. He must keep his own people cowed and quiescent. When they start to cause trouble the infection of revolution may spread fast. Himmler is just the man to head it off, to deal with his usual cruelty with any who even whisper their discontent.

Pattern for Victory

It is noted that our air campaign against Italy is directed in the north against industries and in the center and south against railroads and highways. The purpose is to destroy the ability of the enemy to make war. To sustain fighting armies supplies must be furnished constantly. Unless they can be produced and transported the armies are helpless. With the steady pounding of communications in Italy, like the railway yards at Rome, Foggia, Naples and Salerno, the enemy forces are rendered impotent for sustained combat. When this destruction has progressed far enough the allied armies can land on the peninsula and defeat an enemy whose strength is sapped by crippling his supply

Signs point to an early occupation of Italy, at least up to the "garter" line, above Rome, where the Germans are building defenses to keep the allies out of Lombardy. If our air forces can secure the bases in northern Italy all of Germany and Austria is laid open to bombings; and the ability of the enemy to carry on war will be further pounded out.

Louis Lochner, long-time AP correspondent in Germany, on his return to America urged bombing of rail lines and locomotives. The quickest, shortest route to victory lies in severing supply lines. Air power is doing this on land, as surface fleets have long done it at sea. Naval battles are to determine control of sea lanes, because they are vital to national existence. This second front, from the air, may not be pulling German divisions off the Russian line, but it is cutting down the supplies those Germans receive, and thus must be of great and direct aid to the Russians.

News Behind The News

By PAUL MALLON

WASHINGTON, August 24-There is not the slightest evidence in the Russian military situation to suggest she could consider a separate peaceor indeed, anything other than unconditional sur-

The fall of Kharkov has been explained in a very tired way by the Germans as a withdrawal "according to plan." The truth is the city was the last key to the whole nazi line of defense. The city itself is probably in ruins and of little physical value, but its acquisition by Russians opens up a lateral behind-the-lines railroad from Moscow through Orel and Kursk to Kharkov, a switching point which branches out in all directions to the south.

The Russians now no doubt Paul Mallon will strike in a southwestern direction from Kharkov to threaten the long nazi triangle running along the Black sea to a tip at Taganrog. The Russians are in a position to cut off this sector, and the Germans, no doubt, will have to evacuate it.

Their policy all along the line lately has been to put up a strong fight, holding strategic places as long as possible. But, when faced with extinction now they no longer fight for hopeless positions but withdraw to save men. No nazis have been trapped by the Russians this year.

No good defensive position now remains for them east of the Dnieper river. When they return to that, they will be nearly out of Russia.

Plenty of time remains before winter for the Russians to effect this result. Fighting around Kharkov last year continued until December snows. Russian drives for Bryansk and Smolensk may be hampered by weather before then, but the vital southern front is no where near closing.

The eager movement of Russian troops up to Kharkov showed no sign of weariness in men or material. While we have no military observers on the Russian front continuously (trips to the front have been allowed from time to time duraing the past eight months), authentic reports inspire an expectation that there is a chance that the Russians will now pick up speed. They had to call in some reserves for the final Kharkov action, but that was a minor matter.

Naturally, the German general staff recognizes that unless this speed is broken by resistance in last-stage fights at key points, the German cause is hopeless. Naturally also, the nazis would turn to thinking of a separate peace either with Britain and the United States on one hand, or with Russia

As no apparent separate peace proposals have been made to us, it is reasonable to suppose Hitler hsa been working on the Russians. Russian acceptance, however, is unthinkable because it would mean perpetuation of the nazi military regime in most of Europe and really only an armistice before another attack in a year or two by either party. In view of the military situation, Russia does not need a breathing spell and cannot afford to grant one to Germany.

These Moscow dimpomatic maneuvers are quite another thing (recall of Litvinoff, protesting about a second front, etc.). The mystical Russian foreign policy always is designed primarily to keep everyone guessing

When we drag out our crystal balls and try to read the meaning of any Moscow move, (in war now or in peace later), we are not apt to get the right answer, but are only likely to confuse our-

Never forget this: Stalin never moves in a direct line toward objectives. He can drop Litvinoff one day, pick him up the next, never explaining either move to his people as our statesmen must, but only confusing the rest of the world while he moves in a zigzag line toward what he alone knows and wants.

Our people have been worried for months that Russia would make a separate peace, much more worried than has been publicly admitted. Such a peace would be disastrous to our current prospects, might make a war of 5 or 10 years, or even eventually lose it for us.

They know Stalin is justly angry at the delay in the second front, for he has told visiting statesmen we could well afford to lose a million men in pring full collapse of Germany on the Russian front, if not elsewhere.

But those who read the crystal b News of this appointment is an index that answers to mystical Russian diplomacy, can be sure only of one answer—that is what they are supposed to do, keep on guessing.

Looking back I don't believe she would have told the story of the play had I remained. But was to blame myself bitterly for not being present when she unfolded it to a certain point

He turned up on the sampan just as I finished opening cans and setting out the food. As usual, he was starved and the ner man had to be appeased before he began talking.

"Nice play," he observed finally. "Music, hula girls, dancing, luaus-think, Hasty, everybody eating good Hawaiian food every night on stage!"

"They would do over the Bird of Paradise' as an original!' "She got white colony in it too," Komako remarked.

"Oh! So that's what made them all so mad the night Delmar spouted it to them!" I laughed as I thought about their expressions. "Cariacatures, of course, and anything but flatter-"Maybe." Komako helped himself to more canned peaches "But Delmars put in bad villian. Criminal what run off from police in States and is hiding in colony and-"

I upset my tea as I shot to my feet. "A criminal hiding in Waimaka! Who?" "I not find out," Komako said regretfully. "Women show up to invite Mrs. Delmar for lunch, and she shut up like clam."

"Great Scott!" I began to pace the floor excitedly. "Suppose there really is a criminal hiding here? Suppose Delmar unearthed the story and put him in the play? Suppose the criminal found it out and killed Delmar to stop the play being sent to New York? Komako! It's the motive we've been looking for!" "Could be." Komako said pla-

Thanks J. C. N. for your interesting letter in reply to Mrs. I. N. K. J. C. N. gives this information which may be of interest to others also:

"Is it not barely possible that your correspondent when she asks about 'stepalia' means Stapelia? This, you will recall is a South African plant of singular appearance, resembling a cactus, but belonging to the milkweed family, with very showy red and yellow flowers, sometimes a foot in diameter. But I hardly think this could be cultivated in this latitude outside of a greenhouse. Your conjecture that it is staphylea is more likely to be correct, though personally I have never seen this in cultivation."

Either conjecture may be correct and I shall be glad to hear from Mrs. I. N. K. again with further information concerning the plant she has in mind.

QUESTION: Mrs. S. G. S. says she has tried to kill aphids with rotenone dust but has failed.

ANSWER: Try black leaf 40. It is one of the most effective methods of ridding the garden of aphids. Remember that the spray has to contact the aphids to be of any benefit.

was distinguished as senator from New York, president of the New York Central railroad, and public speaker. This is his nar-

"In view of the approaching presidential election, the legislature passed a law which was signed by the governor, providing machinery for the soldiers' vote. New York had at that time between three and four hundred thousand soldiers in the field, who were scattered in companies, regiments, brigades and divisions all over the south. This law made it the duty of the secretary of state to provide ballots, to see that they reached every unit of a company, to gather the votes and transmit them to the home of each soldier . . .

"Of course, the first thing was to find out where the New York troops were, and for that purpose I went to Washington, remaining there for several months before the war department would give me the information . . . I took my weary way every day to the war department, but could get no results. The interviews were brief and very brusque. The time was getting short. I said to the secretary: 'If the ballots are to be distributed in time, I must have information at once.' He very angrily refused and said: 'New York troops are in every army, all over the enemy's territory. To state their location would be to give valuable information to the enemy. How could I know if that information would be so safeguarded as not to get

"As I was walking down the long corridor, which was full of hurrying officers and soldiers returning from the field or departing for it, I met Elihu B. Washburne, who was a congressman from Illinois and an intimate friend of the president. He stopped me and said:

" 'Hello, Mr. Secretary, you seem very much troubled. Can I help you?' I told him my story. " 'What are you going to do?' he asked. I answered "To protect myself I must report to the people of New York that the provision for the soldiers' voting cannot be carried out because the administration refuses to give information where the New York soldiers are located.'

" 'Why,' said Mr. Washburne, that would beat Mr. Lincoln. You don't know him. While he is a great statesman, he is also the keenest of politicians alive. If it could be done in no other way, the president would take a carpet-bag and go around and collect those votes himself. You remain here until you hear from me. I will go at once and see the president."

"In about an hour a staff officer stepped up to me and asked: 'Are you the secretary of state of New York?' I answered 'Yes.' 'The secretary of war wishes to see you at once," he said. I found the secretary most cordial and charming.

" 'Mr. Secretary, what do you desire?' he asked. I stated the case as I had many times before, and he gave a perempt order to one of his staff that I should receive the documents in time for me to leave Washing ton on the midnight train.

The magical transformation was the result of a personal visit of President Lincoln to the secretary of war. Mr. Lincoln carried the state of New York by a majority of only 6749, and it was a soldiers' vote that gave him the Empire State."

Another war, another election another "keenest of politic alive" in the White house looking to reelection. We may be quite sure the service men and women will be enabled to vote in 1944.
