Challenge on Scrap Metal

Oregon must round up over 19 per cent more scrap metal in the second half of 1943 than it did in the first six months of this year in order to keep the western states war machine rolling, J. Fred Bergesch, war production board district manager, announced Friday.

The increased need for steel plate in expanding war production activities in this area, plus the increased demand for scrap metal by local foundries and west coast steel furnaces, has prompted the higher quotas in the current salvage program.

The Oregon goal is set for 32,-000 additional net tons, as the state's quota has been upped to 110,000 net tons for the current half year as compared with 78,000 net tons for the first six months of 1943, according to W. L. Bowden, WPB district salvage chief. The war production board district salvage operations are now being extended to a spot-check survey of all abandoned mines and railroads, lumber mills, metal bridges, and other deserted projects throughout Oregon, with available idle iron and steel scrap. The drive is under the WPB special projects section, which earmarks the property in the "back country" areas of Oregon and other western states, then traces the owners and arranges the transaction that will start the scrap metal on its way to furnaces when most needed. Under pressure to meet the heavy production schedules of western steel furnaces and mills, the war production board also plans to bear down on available rural scrap in farms and ranches rural scrap in farms and ranches and the scrap metal accumulated Guest Speaker in thriving war industries, Bow-collected, due to renegotiation of war contracts by the federal government, and opposing the Mc-Carran bill in congress which would permit federal agencies to take over hunting areas, were adopted by Oregon's interim com-mission on interstate cooperation at its first meeting here Friday. The meeting was called primarily to hear suggestions by Perry H. Taft, from the San Francisco office of the Council of State Governments, who emphasized the desirability of satisfactory working agreements among west-ern states, with relation both to post-war programs and longrange policies. He said such agreements would eliminate much confusion and competition.

Steps being taken by similar groups in other states were out-lined by Taft. He emphasized employment, private industry, agriculture, transportation and wa-ter power as among the outstanding post-war problems facing the various states, mentioning also public construction programs and the apparent encroachment by the federal government in certain

Elimination of certain interstate trade barriers also was discussed, The resolution relative to renegotiation of contracts was originally adopted in South Carolina. It was reported that a number of states have suffered heavy tax losses in this connection.

Earl Fisher, state tax commissioner, called attention to the substantial amount of property taxes lost in Oregon due to federal acquisition of large tracts of land for military purposes, mentioning particularly Camps Adair and White.

The commission will hold further meetings prior to the 1945 legislative session, it was agreed, if problems meriting its attention arise for proposed action by the Council of State Governments.
