Military Occupation

While the western allies call on peoples of Germany, and formerly of Italy to revolt, peoples who are absolutely helpless under totalitarianism, one-party domination, the real issue will arise over the type of government which the occupying forces will set up in conquered territory. For on the recognition given to local authorities in the villages, the provinces, the departments and finally in the nation will depend the final victory. If in the interest of "legitimacy" AMG merely continues the local functionaries who have been absolutely controlled by the single fascist or Nazi party, who are in fact the party machine, then ours is no war of liberation for the people of these countries. If the old civil functionaries survive, their ideas will survive in positions of control; and their ultimate goal will be the same as that of Hitler and Mussolini. Some new duce or Fuehrer will spring up hoping to succeed by avoiding the mistakes of his predecessors. The narrowness of the margin this time shows that such success is not impossible.

This subject is quite thoroughly discussed in magazine articles, one by Hiram Motherwell in the September Harpers, another by Louis Fischer in the September Atlantic. Both make the same warnings. Writes Motherwell:

Our armies will probably find revolution in full swing when they begin taking over. Shall they refuse to deal with the new revolutionary officials on the ground they were "irregularly appointed"? If so, shall they insist that the Nazi civil service, with its vast power, be restored to office all over Europe, save for the most conspicuous criminals?

Strange as it may sound today, they will be tempted to do just that. At least 90 per cent of the Nazi civil servants will explain that they have been ardent democrats all along and have obeyed Nazi orders only to earn money to support their wives and children. Their plea may sound plausible to the distraught commanding general, who has power under regulations to appoint or depose administrative officials at discretion. . . . We know that the military governor in Sicily is protecting the bulk of the personnel of the old fascist administration in office. Will our armies discover when they come to the heart of Europe that the "automatic nature" of the Nazi civil service "peculiarly fits it to adapt itself to the wishes of an occupying military force?"

Evidently the crucial political decisions will be made on the spot and in the early months of the occupation — not six or twelve months later when the civil authority takes over the burden of helping the crushed and dispirited peoples to create a stable world. Shall the army bequeath to that civil authority a Europe already fixed and molded in accordance with military concepts of desirable law and order?

And Louis Fischer, a veteran correspondent from Europe, writes:

Germany therefore will welcome outside help to set up a free democracy. Help from the west will seem more desirable than the political supremacy of Russia. For apart from all else the Germans will know that sooner or later American and English will leave Germany. They will not be so sure of Russia's intentions.

None of these considerations will count, however, if Russia, fully grasping the causes of Germany's trouble, insists on the ousting of the militarists and reactionaries, whereas the democratic occupying armies do just the opposite. In that case, many Germans will prefer the courage and clarity of Russia's policy to the vacillation and conservatism of the other United Nations. Nothing is certain about the future except that it is uncertain. But this one can say with assurance about Germany after the collapse: What was very unpopular. If the democracies try to keep the past alive they will fail.

The future of Europe depends in large degree on the policies of the occupying armies, and on the practical application of those policies by men in authority clear down to the villages. We dare not confine our part just to military occupation, letting local government run itself. We must adopt a firm policy of ridding the countries of the fascist-Nazi elements in their official life. If we do not, then the peoples of those countries will finish the war, and they may finish it in the direction of communism instead of democracy.

The president has given assurance in his message to Congress that the vestiges of fascism would be extinguished. Will subordinates well down the line sabotage his good intentions?

Tire Shortage Real

The country is evidently getting to the bottom of the tire bin. Last July further restrictive orders on tire allotments were made, the understanding being that they would last only about 90 days. Now they are being further tightened, with no grade 1 tires for holders of B cards unless they have many more miles of essential driving a month than formerly.

One cause of the trouble may be in the failure of synthetic tires to stand up well in road tests. There have been reports of blisters due to overheating, and to tire failures after very short running. Until the kinks in making synthetics are smoothed out, the stock of old rubber has to be conserved more than was figured on. Also the popular demand has been very heavy. There still is too much non-essential driving.

The bad feature is that some persons who need their cars for really essential driving may be caught by the prevailing shortage, while other A drivers may be well fixed as to rubber. And it is going to be hard to drive on rims a few months even if synthetics will be available "in the spring."

Wendell Wilkie is just being coy when he puts an IP ahead of his possible candidacy for president. The candidate who controls the convention usually controls the platform-writing; and after the convention the candidate becomes the platform. If Wilkie can capture the delegates the platform will be taken care of.

Nazi Air Defense

Congressman Will Rogers, jr., reports that the Germans are developing effective defensive weapons against allied air bombings. Fears that such development might occur have been previously expressed in this newspaper. The old rule that each new weapon of offense stimulates invention of a new defensive weapon to counter it, seems to be true in this case. This doesn't mean that allied bombings are beaten, but that they can't be relied upon to finish the job. Congressman Rogers says that any hope of bombing Germany out of the war in the next few months is wishful thinking.

The German weapons are better anti-aircraft guns and more of them; and rocket guns fired from fighter planes.

It is going to take the crunching weight of the Infantry supported by artillery and the air force to knock Germany out of the war. Our high command has recognized this all along, although Churchill seems to have favored at least trying out the air-power theory. Signs point to a fairly early attempt to breach the fortress of Europe on its Atlantic flank. Hitler thinks it is coming there, because he is shifting troops from the eastern to the western front.

News Behind The News

By PAUL MALLON

WASHINGTON, October 4.—The senators returning from their world-wide and south Pacific tours are saying more in private than in public to emphasize their demand for determined self-interested American war and post-war policies.

On the battlelines they rubbed elbows with the men who fight, and they saw war for the first time from a realistic standpoint not possible from their pontifical seats in the senate.

Some of their critics have tried to say that they are anti-British. They are not, in any non-propagandist sense of that word. They merely saw with a soldier's eyes that the British had excellent diplomatic, commercial and propaganda systems working throughout the world, not promoting any other interests than those of the British empire in consonance, of course, with the allied war purposes.

They noted, for instance, that the British eighth army has received much more publicity than the American fifth army. They saw a British oil refinery in Asia Minor running at only 40 per cent capacity while the Americans were required to build a new refinery. They saw the British have control of cables and most other facilities around the world, while we have few or none. They saw many other things like these which cannot be related.

The precise distinction which they made in their minds is the same being made by our army and navy officials generally in their relations with the British, Russians, Chinese, Australians, and others. Their officers and men are our allies and we fight well with them, perhaps closer than any other two nations ever fought in history, but each watches out for its own interests.

Civilian employees in the government diplomatic corps and elsewhere seldom have worked on this basis. Generally, they have been either too weak-kneed or glib. They think no one could say or do anything realistic about the British or Russians without being anti-British or anti-Russian, although it is obvious the British and Russians do not have that attitude toward us.

For instance, not much is said about the help that Russia could give us by granting bases for use against Japan, but much about our failure to help Russia enough.

Such an idea of protecting American interests erroneously has been thought to be isolationist, and, indeed, some criticism of the returning senators has taken that slant. But the group was not made up by isolationists. Indeed, one of the members was such a strong administration man and internationalist as Russell of Georgia, who has been accused of being pro-British in the past.

The weight of these opinions (incidentally along the line hewed for weeks and months past by this column, in fact, since the beginning of the war) will be felt not only in congress but probably throughout the government.

The senators, for instance, became interested in the value of island bases around the world, both from commercial and military aviation standpoints. The dots on the south Pacific will assume importance in the future air world comparable to their military value today. Practically all of these, of course, are in the hands of either the British or Japanese.

And, for another thing, this new senatorial viewpoint may be felt in the office of war information. The senators felt that OWI has pursued too timorous a policy for fear of arousing foreign opinion even to the extent of giving the British credit beyond the Americans, or at least not sufficiently pressing home the American accomplishments as well as the British do theirs.

The exceptional valor of our soldiers in combat was likewise impressive to them. In short, they thought the action at the front more courageous, and conditions at the front being more wisely administered than at home.

The gas rationing changes suggest that, in the love feast recently celebrated between Petroleum Poobah Ickes and OPA Administrator Prentiss Brown, Mr. Ickes is having more than his share.

While Mr. Browne's office of price administration made the announcements reducing B and C card values and lifting A's, the policy represents largely what Mr. Ickes wanted. The official explanation of the change was that too many B and C cards had been issued by local rationing boards for the amount of gas available, but no figures were issued.

The matter obviously is more complicated than that and includes black market operations and other phases. However the new change is likely to be followed by a toughening policy all down the line in accordance with the Ickes tradition.
