

Women of Oregon Complete Tasks, From Smallest to the Most Important

By ISABEL CHILDS

Both as bond campaign workers and as comptrollers of the family fortunes, women must be recognized by war finance committees the country over, representatives of Oregon county war finance organizations emphatically declared in Portland at weekend sessions of the statewide WF committee.

From the tiniest tasks to the heaviest, women of Oregon exhibited capabilities in the third war loan campaign recently, said Sadie Orr Dunbar, speaking at the largely attended Friday afternoon session.

Certain months have been designated for the women's participation division to carry the responsibility for bond sales for six Oregon counties, Mrs. Dunbar, head of the women's division for the entire state, said. In no case, have the women failed to bring in their quotas.

Coos county women have taken a regular share of their country's quota each month, have always topped 100 per cent, once turned over to the labor division $6000 worth of sales' credit—and the women there are addressed with an extra note of respect, according to Mrs. Dunbar.

In Klamath county, the first time Business and Professional Women's club and the Soroptimist club undertook joint sponsorship of the entire month's campaign, the highest record of the war for that area was established.

Down in Lakeview, the women's participation committee consists of one service club, although on December 7, will launch what promises to be Lake county's most successful campaign. Borrowing from last year's December drive sponsors there the idea of a Pearl Harbor dinner, for which a charge of one $100 bond per plate is made, they believe that more than $20,000 worth of such bonds will be sold by that day to residents of Lakeview area alone. Granges and other organizations over the county will hold similar dinners, and the "take" may well put

Lake over the top before the end of the first week in December.

Marion county's comparatively new women's division was represented at the conference (which was half morale - building and half training course) by Mrs. David Wright, chairman, and this writer. Firm in her belief that women anywhere who are given a task and a share in the formulation of policy will do even more than is asked of them, Mrs. Wright gathered suggestions from the dozen other county chairmen of women's participation.

Women of this area may expect to hear those ideas shortly, for Mrs. Wright, who headed the efficiently conducted county-wide survey of womenpower here more than a year ago, knows some of the "tricks of the trade" when it comes to organizing women.

The blue treasury banners, given to organizations in recognition of the fact that 90 per cent or more of the membership has established some systematic plan of bond purchases, may make their appearance in Marion county. Used in Multnomah county, they have stirred women's clubs of various types to both thought and action, Mrs. Dunbar declares and Mrs. Wright was noted jotting down a reminder about the awards.

Women of Rotary will meet Monday afternoon at 1 o'clock for luncheon at the First Congregational church. Mrs. Robert Elstrom will preside at the business session.
