Army Fails To Purchase Rock Crusher

The negotiations between the county and army engineers to sell the county rock crusher for $10,000 have not worked out and the crusher will be put to work again for the county as soon as necessary repairs are made. The crusher was removed from its Jackson Hill location at the beginning of the negotiations and sent to the shops where the repairs are being made. Considerable time had been lost through shutdowns which made the crusher too expensive to operate without repairs but following the reconditioning it is expected to operate profitably.

Plans to send the old crusher to Stayton have been altered through the crusher operations set up by Charles Hoyt which will segregate that area. It is probable that the crusher will be set up at the Jackson Hill site.

A new crusher is being set up near Jefferson on the Linn side by Harold Wallings and the county expects to inspect that site soon to see whether it can be used for Marion county.

Third Sermon Is Scheduled

First Methodist church has laid careful plans for its morning service Sunday, the whole worship being built around the pastor's third sermon in a series of three on "Central Certainties in an Age of Transition." The subject for Sunday is "The Church—Not a Safety First Device, but a Builder of the Fabric of the World." The service will begin with a great organ number by Professor T. S. Roberts, who has been organist here for 38 years.

This is to be followed by the professional of the vested choir down the long aisles of the old pioneer church, singing "For Thy Church that Evermore Lifteth Holy Hands Above." "The Church's One Foundation" and other special anthem numbers will be given.

In the 102 years since the founding of First Church in Salem, the official board has licensed 72 ministers and sent out 20 missionaries, five of whom are now at work in other countries. Few American churches can boast such a record. Great changes have come over the world, but this old church, like thousands of others, still stands firm, in a great devotion to God and humanity, and today enjoys one of Oregon's very largest congregations.
