Greetings Should Be Sentimental

By MAXINE BUREN

Looking over the large collection of Christmas cards for this season, I wondered if many have not forgotten the real spirit of the day—that of peace on earth.

Christmas cards have taken an important place in our celebration of the birthday of Christ, which above all, is a religious holiday. Many cards in the latest designs merely use Christmas symbols a foil for a theme of war—Santa Claus riding a jeep or astride a cannon, a flag-draped candle that looks like a firecracker, with the smoke forming letters of Christmas greeting.

Nothing is so remote from the Christmas spirit as war. We can surely be patriotic in the highest degree, and yet leave it out of our Christmas greetings.

Primarily these patriotic cards are designed to be sent to soldiers and sailors, yet I believe they would far rather receive cards with the old time sentiment of real Christmas. Cards that remind them of a home at peace, where the smell of Christmas greens permeates the firelit living-room, and stockings hang on the mantel. Won't he want to remember the Christmas tree as a room's decoration and carols the music for the day, he'll want to recall children singing, bells ringing, poinsettias and Santa and reindeer. He will enjoy the kind of card that brings tears very near, and makes the heart beat a little faster.

I think he will.

Miss Pauline Craven will attend her sister as maid of honor. She will wear a renoir blue suit with black accessories and her corsage will be rosebuds and gardenias.

Mr. Bell Lane will stand with his brother as best man.

Mrs. Craven will wear a black silk crepe dress trimmed in aqua and gold beads for her daughter's nuptials. Mrs. Lane's dress is black silk with red velvet trim and their corsages will be of gardenias and roses.
