Dunsmoor With Elstrom—Appointment of Harold Dunsmoor, long a prominent paint contractor here, to take active working charge of all paint contracting for the R. L. Elstrom company was announced at company offices here Friday. Dunsmoor came to Salem in 1924, working with his late brother, William "Bill" Dunsmoor. For the past 10 years he has used products of the Elstrom firm as an independent contractor and so "is completely at home with the line," members of the firm said yesterday. For the past year he has supervised the company's work related to the war effort, an activity which has taken him outside the city much of the time.

Last Member of D'Arcy Family Dies Suddenly in Portland

PORTLAND, Jan. 28—(AP)—The pioneering history of the D'Arcy family, which settled in Salem in 1859 and established a building contractor's business there, ended yesterday with the death of Jack D'Arcy.

The Salem-born lawyer and Willamette university graduate was the last member of the family. He was 79.

A former part owner of the Capital News at Boise, Idaho, and associate with the Anaconda Copper company at Butte, Mont., he had been in Portland managing the D'Arcy estate.

Although he had made his home in Salem only intermittently since the turn of the century, the name of W. J. "Jack" D'Arcy appeared frequently among the supporters of local charity and war cause campaigns. The day of his death, his order for purchase of a block of war bonds was received in the office, space for which he had donated in his Court street building.

Born in Salem in 1868 on lot 1, block 1, of the original Salem townsite, he was a son of Peter and Barbara D'Arcy, who came to this country in 1830 from Ireland. The elder D'Arcy was contractor for many of the city's early residences and he gave his name to another son, Judge Peter H. D'Arcy, who died here in the fall of 1933.

Death of Jack D'Arcy leaves only two surviving of the original charter members of the Salem Elks lodge, Frank Wightman of Salem and Dr. T. C. Smith, Portland. He was the second exalted ruler of the lodge and for many years the oldest living past exalted ruler. When the lodge was established here in 1896 he gave his age as 28 years. The older brother, who died here more than 10 years ago, was a charter member and fourth exalted ruler of the order in Salem.

Jack D'Arcy attended Salem public schools and Willamette university and following his admission to the bar, practiced law here for a number of years with his brother. He never married, although as a young man he had a reputation as the city's handsomest beau.

As a member of the Capitol hose and engine team, he rated high for his prowess as a foot racer. Leaving Salem early in this century, he became part owner of the Capital News of Boise, Idaho, taking charge of the advertising department. He was later public relations representative for Anaconda Copper Mining company, and participated in politics in both Idaho and Montana.

Not long before the death of Judge D'Arcy in 1933, the younger brother returned to Salem to take up his residence, later going to Portland to make his home in the Benson hotel. There he was associated with the Mahoney US senatorial campaigns and had recently been mentioned for national democratic committeeman from Oregon.

Final arrangements for the Jesuit novitiate at Sheridan and for the St. Barbara chapel there in honor of their mother, planned and financed prior to his death by P. H. D'Arcy, were carried out by W. J. D'Arcy, it is understood here.

Much of the time of the younger brother was given, after the death of Miss Theresa D'Arcy in the 1930's, to the care of the family estates.
