Carrier based planes, coordinating their bombing with artillery and naval shelling, covered the landing parties.

Units of the fourth marine division, commanded by Maj. Gen. Harry Schmidt, had shoved the Japanese into the extreme northern portion of Namur inlet. There the Nipponese, confronted with an overwhelming force, apparently were putting up a desperate, lastman defense

The seventh infantry division, commanded by Maj. Gen. Charles H. Corlett, was firmly established on Kwajalein key, the communique said, and was pushing the enemy back.

Runways of the Roi airfield proximably were badly bombpocked from the weeks of pre-invasion softening-up. The field will be repaired quickly, however, for use against other enemy strongholds in the islands. Namur, connected with Roi by a causeway, was an enemy barracks and plane dispersal area.

New tactics were followed in striking at the Marshalls, catching the enemy off-balance.

"It is now apparent," said Adm. Nimitz today, "that the attack took the enemy completely by surprise."

These tactics, in strong contrast to the frontal assault in the invasion of the Gilbert islands last November, took advantage of the numerous cays that flank the atoll strongpoints. This enabled the assault forces to establish beachheads and set up artillery with which to blast their major objectfves on adjacent islands.

Under cover of this shelling, and while warships and planes continued their pounding of the enemy, the assault forces moved Tuesday onto Roi, Kwajalein and Namur. They used a new type of Today's communique still gave no indication of enemy sea or air opposition. It was believed, however, that the Japanese would make some determined effort to hold these islands of their inner defense ring, once they had recoiled from the surprise of the in-

Just before the fourth marines started their invasion of Namur. Gen. Schmidt issued a message to his officers and men in which he said they were "superior to the enemy in any kind of fighting." He added:

"Your weapons are superior to those of the enemy. The naval gunfire and air support you are to receive will surpass anything previously provided. If everyone in the team does his part and does it on time, the enemy will be so fully occupied as to minimize our losses and increase his. The blow fell Monday in the Kwajalein atoll area, in the heart of the Marshals, and at least ten beachheads were quickly estab-

The absence of German fighters over such an important segment of the Atlantic wall as Pas-de-Calais suggests these possibilities:

1. The staggering German air force which lost 220 planes in the last five days alone-now is forced to devote its entire strength to the defense of the home front

2. The German forward posiraids that they no longer are worth defending at the expense of first line fighting craft and pilots.
3. The allied command of the Reds Cross air this close to Britain is so absolute that it would be foolish for solute that it would be foolish for belienge it until the opening of the second
