

Frank Sinatra is shown above in "before the mike" studies of the most popular radio singer of the day. Sinatra, long the heavily featured attraction of the nationally broadcast "Hit Parade," is perhaps more in demand today than any other personality on the air. His own sustaining feature, "Songs by Sinatra," heard over the Columbia network every Sunday evening, has rapidly become one of the most-listened-to vocal programs in the history of radio. Day-in, day-out appearance—following his sensational success engagement in the Waldorf-Astoria hotel—assume the importance of nationally broadcast programs. Topping all is Frank's screen debut in RKO Radio's brilliant musical, "Higher and Higher," in which, co-starred with Jack Haley and Michele Morgan, he sings such hit compositions as "The Music Stopped" and others. "Higher and Higher" opens today at Warner's Elstree theatre.

LETTER TO AN ARMY NURSE

Dear Amy:

We certainly get a thrill out of reading about the swell job that you have done in Italy. The army nurse is the great unsung hero of this war anyhow.

Yes, I wrote here on purpose. (Heroine sounds too feminine for a woman who has flown across the Atlantic and the Mediterranean, jumped into a foxhole when the Stukas dove at her, and worked 20 hours a day in range of the enemy artillery.

Back home here our Oregon women are on the job, too. You ought to see the welders in their overalls and tin hats. A third of all the shipbuilders in the Swan Island yards are women.

But the big woman's job right now is the battle of the 4th War Loan. Thousands of Oregon women make up most of the civilian army that is in there pitching to shove Oregon over its 99 million dollar quota.

You can count on them to put it over, Amy, because we folks back home in our comfortable houses will never let down the men and women in the cold and mud of the fighting front.

How can we expect you to do your dangerous job if we're not willing to do our safe one?

Stevens & Son

One of a series of letters to our fighters on the war front.
