Plight of Small Nations

The plight of Finland illustrates the situation of all small states which have as neighbors powerful and rival nations. Originally set upon by Russia in the winter of 1940, Finland, after some initial success, was badly mauled and forced to capitulate and yield territory to Russia. The latter was evidently taking advantage of Germany's preoccupation with war in the west to strengthen the soviet military position about Leningrad.

When the Germans turned on Russia they found Finland a ready ally, the Finnish government and army being eager to regain the lost territory and to smack down Russia against whom the Finns have both an ancient hate and a modern fear (communism). But the Finnish campaign never got very far toward Leningrad. The Germans moved in enough strength to hold Finland in pawn but not enough to make any military advance from that country. With the reversal in Russia to German arms the Finns have seen their own position steadily deteriorate.

Now Finland is caught in the vise between the two great rivals. Russia is battering her capital by air, but the Germans threaten to withhold food supplies and to use their own armies in Finland to hold that country against Russia. The latter country lays down harsh terms of armistice to Finland; internment of the German military forces and withholding of all supplies in aid of Germany. The Finnish parliament has discussed the proposed terms but so far finds them unacceptable. One reason for the delay in seeking peace is the pro-nazi complexion of the Finnish cabinet. It is recalled that Germany was a friend of Finland in first world war days and after. Also the fear of Russia has so long gripped Finland that it is hard now to yield to Russian demands.

Poland finds itself in somewhat similar situation, fearing Russia's power yet unwilling to come to terms with its eastern neighbor, its government-in-exile seeming to prefer extinction rather than accommodation with Russia. Czecho-Slovakia alone is on good terms with the soviet union, having recently concluded a treaty with that country.

Thus the small states have a most difficult time of it, whether they line up against Germany or Russia. That is why the small states are eager for some form of collective security as a substitute for the old balance of power system in which rival nations or groups of nations periodically fight it out over the prostrate forms of their weaker neighbors.

The Governor's Decision

Only those who have had similar responsibilities can appreciate the strain which attends the making of a major appointment such as Gov. Snell was forced to make in choosing a successor to the late Sen. McNary. The writer could fully sympathize with the governor though the selection of a senator did not fall within the writer's term. In this case the often-expressed ambition of the governor himself to serve in the senate made the strain the more acute. His final decision, while it will be disappointing to many (and notably to his own friends because of his declining to run for the office himself), shows that the governor fought the matter out in his own mind and did what he thought was best for the state and for his party. He subordinated immediate personal ambition in making that decision.

Guy Cordon is well and favorably known in Oregon. We congratulate him on being appointed to serve in the senate to represent this state. He knows his way around in Washington, and whether his period of service be long or short he will do his best to give Oregon good representation in the senate.

The final selection now passes to the voters.

Interpreting The War News

By KIRKE L. SIMPSON Copyright 1944 by the Associated Press

The Baltic flank of the Russian front held the most immediate ill omens for Germany as the first blustery week of March closed with its foreshadow of approaching spring battles to give the encircled foe no rest anywhere.

Nazi hopes that red army onslaughts against the Pskov and Narva gateways to the Baltic states could be held off until spring thaws bog them down were waning fast. A German flight from Estonia to escape entrapment by a Russian break-through at Pskov was in prospect if not actually in

That threat now is too obvious for even nazi broadcasters to conceal from the German public. It is linked with Finland's fate. Russian reoccupation of Estonia dominating the upper Baltic would leave Finland utterly isolated from her nazi war partner. A synchronized military and political crisis for Hitler at that end of his battered eastern front seemed only days, even hours, distant at the week end.

There were ominous developments also on the Black sea end of his Russian front. The allies plan to turn over a considerable portion of Italy's surrendered war fleet to Russia. Consider this in the light of intensified anglo-American pressure on neutral Turkey by suspension of armament and lend-lesse shinments

The normal theatre of action for Italian war craft to be acquired by Russia would be the Black sea. Reinforcing the Russian Black fleet, the Italfan craft could materially aid the Russian effort to clear the south as well as the north end of the line of nazi invaders, re-emphasize the Russian threat to Rumania, and intensify Bulgarian desire

Westward the stepping up of the promised al-lied air attack on Germany is the full swing. The day-and-night blasting at German fighter plane production facilities and the heavy toll of inter-ceptors in air battles is whitting down the enemy's ty to meet the massive air blows. Twice thin the week huge bomber fleets roared

Liquor and Logic

An ardent dry who advocates another test on the issue of national prohibition sends us a tabulation of the 1933 vote covering the 37 states which voted whereby the Eighteenth amendment was repealed. It shows that out of almost 70 million eligible voters in the nation, less than 21 million went to the polls. About 41 million stayed away from the polls; eight million live in the states which did not vote. The outcome was 14,202,862 votes for repeal, 6,666,140 against. Thus 21.2 per cent of the nation's voters brought about repeal.

The author of this tabulation excoriates the "stay-at-home, slacker voter" but almost in the same breath voices the assumption that most of them favored prohibition or did not especially favor repeal. The only safe assumption is that they were not zealots on either side of the question.

But in proposing another yote on prohibition at this time this writer who invokes logic in support of his cause, overlooks the fact that some millions of voters-perhaps as many as voted "no" in 1933-will be overseas and possibly unable to vote when the issue comes to a head; and then the wets will have the same old complaint they used before: that prohibition was "slipped over" while the able-bodied young men were away fighting. If any new test comes certainly it should be before the whole electorate.

On Secretary of State Robert S. Farrell, jr., and his staff fell the task of handling arrangements on behalf of the state at the Mc-Nary funeral. It was a difficult task, because the hall of representatives could not nearly care for those desiring seats. By use of seats in the lobby space outside the hall and of amplifiers to carry the words of the service most of those in attendance were comfortably cared for.

The Salem chamber of commerce played the part of host to the congressional delegation and visiting notables in a luncheon and informal reception at the Marion, and did it so well as to win compliments from visitors and homefolk. Nothing was left undone to see that appropriate courtesies were shown the visitors, with due regard to the sad nature of the mission which brought them to Salem.

News Behind The News

By PAUL MALLON

(Distribution by King Features Syndicate, Inc. Repro-

WASHINGTON, March 5-The profound inner effect of the Roosevelt-Barkley break was not made apparent to the country.

It was evident, however, in the 8000 telegrams and 12,000 letters received by the democratic floor leader after he resisted the president, as well as in the private comment later from outstanding democratic leaders. One such leader believes the incident will become as historic and decisive as Grover Cleveland's free trade break with congress over the Mills bill, which caused his defeat for re-election the following year.

The administration is moving energetically though quietly to prevent such a disastrous effect. Mr. Barkley is now circulating under his frank, a reprint of his political praises of the administration delivered earlier on the third anniversary in January of the Roosevelt third term.

Running through the Barkley correspondence, you will find a thread of fear existing throughout the country that constitutional democratic government has been falling apart. Many citizens, noting the arbitrary centralized powers being wielded by the president, are genuinely (non politically) dejected.

They (mostly democrats and Roosevelt supporters) think this nation will have difficulty surviving the pressure for dictatorship from within and without unless congress asserts a powerful influence. They see much of the rest of the world likely to develop that way even after victory, and note the tendencies of the president to assume responsibility for everything in a somewhat similar vein.

This was the theme of the personal popular approval of Barkleys stand, as reflected in his

Some change of front for the democratic campaign apparently now is being planned to meet

Passing of Republican Leader McNary likewise will bring many important inner changes that will become noticeable in coming events. He was a wise and open-minded man, and personally expected to have a strong hand in choosing the coming presidential nominee. He was not friendly with Willkie, even avoided his running mate here on several occasions. He thought Dewey the strongest probable candidate.

His counsel was sought by all who wanted truth. In one occasion (it may now be told) he was even asked by the president to help solve the personal differences between State Secretary Hull and Under-Secretary Welles. Everyone who knew him, of whatever political hue, respected

First reaction to his passing is a contest for the republican leadership, although not much is being said about it. The contest naturally lies between Senators Vandenberg, Taft, White and Bridges, although the choice will be either Vandenberg or Taft.

Some republicans wish to postpone the issue until after election and continue the existing setup whereby White is acting leader and Vandenberg is acting chairman of the republican conference, a position which will enable him to appoint the important steering and other committees.

A story is going around that Ohio's Governor Bricker was offered the vice presidential nomination with Willkie and turned it down. Undoubtedly, it is an erroneous guess by someone who knew that Bricker recently spent a day in private conference with Sam Pryor, the Connecticut Willkie associate. No common understanding, or at least no cooperative action between those lwo, is expected.

proposed to the voters. When it comes to outlining the needs of the district the difficulty is to find where to stop. We have some very old elementary schoolhouses, which are not placed where the school population is growing. The greatest growth is out on the fringes of the city, which means that additions will be needed at Highland and Englewood, while there is need for replacement of old buildings like Washington and

At both the senior high school and Parrish junior high the school plant was never properly completed for lack of money. Parrish needs an auditorium, cafeteria and gymnasium space. The senior high school's heating plant should be replaced with a central heating plant for it and Parrish. There is most urgent need for space at senior high for music instruction.

The committee's report touches on vocational work, and in my opinion the Salem school district should step out after the war with a real vocational school, which could be linked with soldier rehabilitation. The old high school could, in part be converted to such use.

The six-mill levy is in addition to the regular levy for support of the schools and retirement of bonds, and is for a fiveyear term. Moreover the committee makes it plain that with any marked increase in population even this sum may not be adequate, and a bond issue may be needed for new construction. However the district has been retiring rapidly the bonds is-sued on its PWA building program of several years ago, so we need not fear the load of a new issue if it becomes necessary.

We have community responsibilities toward our schools. They are marking time as far as improvements go now. We had just as well get ready for the postwar period by putting some money to the credit of the school district. In any event voters (who in this election are limited a taxpayers) should turn out and vote Tuesday.

Farmers and Daylight Saving

Customs are usually built on some well founded condition. It is so with the custom of early rising on the farm, which is not brought about by the failure of farmers to keep up with the modern trend of the world, but because he must get chores out of the way so that he will not be behind, throughout the day, in his contacts with the rest of the world.

For those on the farm do not live altogether to themselves. His daily contacts with the rest of the world have been greatly increased by improved methods of travel. He usually has to have his milk at the roadside by seven, or if not milk then some other appointment is met and to keep those engagements he must rise long before day practically all of the year.

It is suggested in the editorial "War Time Issue Revived" in the February 9th issue of the Statesman, that farmers just rise an hour later by the clock. Why not an hour earlier by the clock for those who would shift to an unbalanced day. I carried a flashlight to the pasture each morning for three of the six months that the cattle were on pasture last summer. Though the pasture is small and free from obstructions, occasionally a cow would slip away after she had been routed out of her bed, making a second trip to look for her ne-

Certainly Christ asks for behavior more than natural when he tells his followers to love their enemies, to turn the other cheek, and to go the second mile. The impulsive, natural reaction would be to do exactly the opposite. But Christ expects of Christians something far higher. He still offers a challenge which mankind has yet to accept!

Art Classes To Start Here Next Week

EUGENE, Oregon, March 4 -(Special)-Spring term evening extension classes will begin in Salem March 13, W. G. Beattie, acting director of the general extension division of the state system of higher education, announced this week. Two courses will be offered, each of 1 hour, AA 290, lower division painting, and AA 291, lower division drawing, and will be taught by Constance E. Fowler. who has had charge of the art department at Willamette university since 1935. The classes will meet on Monday evenings from 7:15 to 9:15 p.m., in room 301, School Administration building. The fee is $5 for each course.
