Shift in Draft Schedules

"Things are looking good for us in Italy right now," the raw recruit remarked. "Listen, sonny," retorted the hard-boiled sergeant, "When I came in the army a put all that behind me, see?"

That may be a bit far-fetched for this war, in which the soldier is encouraged to think for himself at least in certain situations. But in a general way it's "strictly GI". Soldiers usually know where they are, seldom know where they're going to be tomorrow, or why. Presently they cease to wonder or care, and possibly that's the real objective, the reason the army is "that way."

It takes a little time for soldiers-in-the-making to cease wondering and worrying about tomorrow, as civilians do. Men newly accepted for induction, not yet in uniform, still think as civilians. It was beyond doubt a bit hard on those who had settled all their civilian affairs and packed up to leave for service, when a change in orders, "nobody over age 25," was issued within 48 hours of the time scheduled for their departure.

But if they do eventually get into uniform they'll have to get used to it, and if they don't they will have had this slight experience of what the army is like. If they are griping about it—why, that's army too.

On the other hand one does get the impression that there is confusion somewhere along the line, otherwise why such a reversal of policy on such short notice? The reason behind the reversal is not difficult to judge. The army is now built; there are plenty of officers and enough technicians; the need is for replacement for combat duty. It's no reflection on the older men already trained and in service. The point is that no more such men are needed. But—all this was known three months ago when it was announced that the great bulk of the army would be moved overseas this year. Why does the change of policy, then, have to go into effect overnight?

Oh, well, perhaps we already have the answer. Perhaps army-minded folk in selective service thought civilians needed something to gripe about. It's supposed to be a sign of health and good morale.

Youth Plans for Itself

Much is being written about the alarming increase in teen-age delinquency. Adult committees are formed, long discussions ensue, yet seldom is a definite program outlined.

But from Madison, Wis., comes news of a new approach to this perplexing problem. A council of young people was recently set up to serve in an advisory capacity to the Dane County Recreation committee.

Objectives of the council, as decided by the youths themselves at the first meeting, are:

1. To provide a medium of expression for youth on war service, recreational and civic problems.
2. To give youth an opportunity to share in the planning and conduct of its own recreation.
3. To bring about better use of recreational facilities for young people in Madison.
4. To afford youth opportunities to render important community services.
5. To give youth a chance to practice the principals of democracy so that "we can better accept its responsibilities in later life."

The Defense Recreation committee recommended that the council select its own name and appoint its own committees, depending upon the field of work to which the young people decided to give their services.

Although the youth council is less than two months old, it has already become an active force in the community.

Here is a plan that might well be studied in other communities. Certainly no group is better equipped to deal with teen-age problems than the teen-agers themselves.

Bombing Cities

Current bombing of German cities is characterized as a "revolting necessity" by Methodist Bishop B. Bromley Oxman of Boston as his answer to petitioners who appealed recently for a relaxation of these air attacks on the ground that such attacks "are not a justifiable act of war."

Bishop Oxman, whose two sons are army officers, declared that he is "just like other fathers" and never opens a telegram without apprehension.

"I want a world free from fascists," said the prelate. "I believe subjection to fascism is more degrading and destructive, in the long run, than war, hideous as war is! I want to be certain that my sons' sons do not march a generation later."

"I believe that victory is essential to that end and that these bombings are a revolting necessity. War involves the imposition of our will upon our enemy through the destruction of his organized force."

In conclusion Bishop Oxman says, "I would not be misunderstood. I want no preacher blessing war. I do not want Christ caricatured and dressed in khaki. War is stern sturdy business. We are in it. To call for a lessening of applied force either in bombing, blockade, or battle is to prolong this awful thing."

Fifth War Loan Drive

Secretary of the Treasury, Henry Morgenthau, has announced that the sale of Series E bonds will be featured during the 15 billion dollar Fifth War Loan drive scheduled for June.

In lifting the amount asked for, 2 billions above that of the Fourth drive and 1 billion above the Third, the treasury has outlined a program that will call for more intensive effort than any of the previous campaigns.

It is known that the cream of investment funds has already been skimmed off by earlier campaigns. Many of the sources of large subscriptions—the institutional investors, trust funds, and wealthy individuals—which were the mainstays of the past war loan campaigns have drawn heavily upon their accumulated cash and funds realized by liquidation of other securities.

This means that future drives must plow deeper into the great mass of small individual savings. With four-fifths of the national income estimated by Secretary Morgenthau as going to people earning less than $5000 a year, it is here that the inflationary potentials are most threatening. Though the amounts of possible saving and investment by such people may be small individually, the aggregate is large.

To reach these millions of small savers is, however, a much tougher job than selling to the more limited number of "have got's." It will call for more volunteers to complete greater solicitation.

In Salem, under the banner of civilian defense, an army of women are organized as "block leaders." Trained in solicitation and somewhat familiar with conditions that surround the homes in the territory they cover, many of them have helped in past drives and will be ready to help again.

School for Employes

Without fanfare the Crown Zellerbach Paper company has for a number of years conducted a company school for the benefit of employes of plants in Oregon and Washington. The school is conducted at Camas, Washington. Those from Oregon completing courses receive degrees from Oregon State college and the Washington state employes from the University of Washington.

Most of the courses relate to paper-making, chemistry, forestry, chemical engineering, and mechanical engineering. Four hours per week, or 84 hours credit for the semester are required for credit.

Benefits from this school have been two-fold—opportunity for advancement for the employe and many new ideas and suggestions for management. Further, it exemplifies a spirit of cooperation between employer and employe that may well be adopted by other large corporations.

High taxes are dooming the mansions of the wealthy. There is nothing harder for an estate to dispose of than the mansion homes of decadent. But the law of compensation works. In New York an electrical workers union of the CIO has bought the Vanderbilt mansion for a headquarters; and in Detroit the United Automobile workers have bought the mansion once the home of the late Edsel Ford. They will use it to house the union's Medical Research institute. And at Portland the Lloyd Frank estate is now Lewis and Clark college. The mansions get into use for more people, at any rate.

This Jap invasion of India keeps us worried more than the British command at New Delhi. Maybe it's a trick to see how close the driver can take his car to the edge of the precipice, but more his car of the road prefer to keep a wide margin away from the edge. We'd feel better if the Indians and British pinched off the Jap invasion without giving us such a scare as the cutting of the Assam railway would mean.

Interpreting The War News

By KIRKE L. SIMPSON

Matching the American-Australian challenge to Japanese sea and air power in the far Pacific, the first significant allied blow at the southeastern Asia command has been struck across the Bay of Bengal, falling on Sabang, the island off the northwest tip of Sumatra.

Delivered by carrier-based planes of the now powerful sea arm of Admiral Lord Louis Mountbatten's forces, it was preceded by an air raid by American long range bombers on Port Blair in the southern Andaman islands off the coast of the Malay peninsula to the north, probably intended to neutralize any possible Japanese air interference.

Both strokes apparently caught the enemy by surprise. They definitely served to put Tokyo on notice, however, that it is confronted with developing two-front sea-air warfare at the southern end of the Nipponese China sea conquest zone, tending to force a division of dwindling Japanese sea and air power to guard both east and west approaches to that sea.

The Sabang attack completes the ultimate challenge of the allied sea power to Japan long ago foretold by Prime Minister Churchill, and helps make clearer developments in Burma and in eastern China indicating Japanese counter strategy. Nor can it be seriously doubted that allied leadership is more concerned over recent enemy moves in eastern China than with the diversionary Nipponese invasion of India from northern Burma that seems virtually to have run its course.

A three pronged Japanese drive in the Chung-now-Chengchow region in eastern China, aimed at clearing the Peiping-Hankow railroad, is reported from Chungking. It implies a new Japanese attempt to seize complete control of the great north-south communications artery across eastern China from Canton to Chengchow. Chinese forces hold two wide stretches of the parallel rail and road system, one above and one below Hankow, from which the Japanese have never been able to dislodge them.
