PRA Requests Highway Work Grange Told

Protests of officers of the Oregon state grange against the immediate improvement of three sections of the Pacific highway, to cost $2,500,000, apparently are based on a misunderstanding, state highway commission officials declared here Friday.

Highway department officials made it plain that these projects were not initiated by the highway commission but at the request of the federal public roads administration and the army transportation corps. One project is located between Salem and Jefferson, another in the vicinity of Halsey and Harrisburg and the third in the Grave Creek-Wolf Creek district south of Roseburg.

Grange officers contend that men required for this work could be used to better advantage on the farms and in essential war industries.

Of the $2,500,000 necessary to defray the cost of the improvements $1,000,000 would be furnished by the federal government and none would come out of the $3,000,000 postwar highway fund.

"In event these improvements are not made at this time this federal money will be lost to Oregon," highway commission officials declared.

It was emphasized that these improvements would eliminate bottlenecks on the Pacific highway and facilitate heavy traffic resulting from the war.

The improvements are now being studied by the war production board.

USO Director Seeks More Scrapbooks

Now developing the USO scrapbook project in Salem and surrounding communities is Salvation Army Adjutant B. W. Glaeser, USO club director, with the first 500 scrapbooks well on their way to completion for delivery to service men.

There's more of an urgent need than ever before for persons willing to make USO scrapbooks said Adjutant Glaeser. He asked that those interested contact local scrapbook headquarters, 357 Court street, for information on scrapbook making needed to help meet increased demands from service men within this country and overseas.

At the same time Adjutant Glaeser told of a letter coming from overseas, written by US Navy Yeoman R. B. Capella and expressing appreciation of a ship's crew to the many women engaged in scrapbook production.

Scrapbooks made here are being sent to nearby hospitals, isolated outposts and overseas, providing reading entertainment not only for the man they are sent to but for many of his comrades.

On a national scale, more than 150,000 USO scrapbooks have been made and sent to service men through efforts of volunteers in this country.

Draft Ruling Won't Hinder

State selective service headquarters officials declared here Friday that the recent ruling of federal officers deferring temporarily men over 26 years of age from war service, apparently would not interfere or slow up Oregon's draft activities.

"It is our opinion that the June and July quotas will be supplied without difficulty under the latest regulation," an attaché of the department said.

Colonel Elmer Wootton, state selective service director, is now in Washington conferring with federal selective service officials.

Marsters Resigns From State Job

Resignation of Collis R. Marsters as attorney for the state industrial accident commission, effective May 20, was announced by Attorney General George Neuner here Friday. Neuner said he had not yet selected a successor to Marsters.

Ray Lafky, Salem attorney, has been appointed to handle the legal affairs of the accident commission claims division in place of Jay Stockman, who resigned two weeks ago.

4th Fireworks Still Not Legal

Governor Earl Snell Friday issued a proclamation continuing in operation a previous order prohibiting the sale or use of fireworks, pyrotechnics, or other forms of combustible explosives that may be used as signalling devices or to simulate sounds of gunfire, except for controlled firework displays made lawful by approval by the 9th regional defense board.

The original proclamation was issued on June 30, 1943, at the request of Lt. Gen. John L. DeWitt, then commanding general, western defense command and 4th army, with headquarters at San Francisco.

The unit commanded by a third lieutenant is a platoon, which in the Philippine army consisted of 32 riflemen, two platoon guides, a platoon sergeant, and the third lieutenant. Companies had no weapons platoon, he said, but there were heavy weapons companies.

His parents, so far as he knows, are in Manila, and ignorant of his whereabouts. So are the records of his commission and of the military training which led up to it, a fact which complicated his effort to secure a commission in the US army following induction.

He hopes he'll be able to help do something about the recapture of his native islands.

Philippine 3rd Lieutenant Now Corporal at Camp Adair

CAMP ADAIR, May 11—(Special)—A long way and a long time from Manila, his home, is Cpl. Ramon Fajaro, now with the 570th signal company, 70th division, Camp Adair—but he still remembers back in 1939 when he was a third lieutenant in the Philippine army, the only army in the world with third lieutenants. At that time the Philippine army had about 30,000 soldiers active and about 200,000 in reserve. It was commanded by a former US chief of staff, one Douglas MacArthur.

War didn't seem very imminent, however, and a military career didn't seem to offer the prospects Cpl. Fajaro hoped for. He became a newspaper reporter, and worked his way through the Far East in the tradition of the itinerant legman. He worked on the Philippines Herald, the Shanghai Times, Hong Kong's South China Morning Post, and finally jumped to Honolulu and got a job on the Advertiser there.

In December, 1941, the Japs bombed Pearl Harbor. On December 8, Fajaro was at Bellows field when the Japs came in the second day and strafed the field. Then the government issued a call for men with clerical experience, and Fajaro answered it. But inaction became more and more galling. Finally, in March, 1943, he volunteered for induction and was sent to Camp Cooke, Calif., as a buck private.

From Cooke he went to Camp Kohler, Calif., for training in signal work, and came from there to Oregon State college for ASTP training. He speaks Spanish, Tagalog (native Philippine), English, some Malayan and began learning Chinese at OSC.

The order transferring ASTP men to army ground forces ended all that; Fajaro found himself in the 70th division, and because of his signal training, was assigned to the 570th signal company.

Asked about the interesting rank of third lieutenant, he revealed that it has no insignia—merely bare shoulder boards. A second lieutenant wears one bar on his boards, and so on.

Plans are being proposed for the expansion of the Cavern in the basement of Waller hall in order to facilitate handling a larger number of student customers. At the last policy committee meeting for the Cavern, approximately $200 was reported to be accumulated in the Cavern fund.

LONDON—(AP)—"I have always told her everything," said Alfred Taylor, a war worker convicted of betraying military secrets in a letter to his wife.

"I realize now I have been foolish," he added as the judge imposed a $100 fine.

Agnes Booth Turner Speaker

TURNER—Mrs. Agnes Booth, county school superintendent and a former Turner teacher, will address the eighth grade graduates May 29. The exercises will be held in the high school auditorium at 8 o'clock.

Miriam Day New Cavern Co-Head

Miriam Day, sophomore from San Francisco, Calif., has taken over the duties of co-manager of the Willamette university Bearcat Cavern, student union, replacing Betty Andrews, who resigned to take another office. Miss Day will work as Cavern manager with Thelma Lathrop, who has held the position since the opening of the semester in March.

Plans are being proposed for the expansion of the Cavern in the basement of Waller hall in order to facilitate handling a larger number of student customers. At the last policy committee meeting for the Cavern, approximately $200 was reported to be accumulated in the Cavern fund.

ASK HOLMAN to answer this quotation from page 236 of the famous book, Under Cover:

"And on March 4, 1941, as the Senate and gallery sat tense, the Oregon Senator blantly praised Hitler and suggested that England and America might advantageously emulate him."

ASK HOLMAN why he was away from Washington on the day Congress voted to declare war. And why he failed to answer 148 roll calls out of 239 between May 15 and Dec. 16, 1942. (Senator McNary was absent once in this period.)

ASK HOLMAN why he has been quoted with high approval in the Roll Call, published by William Dudley Pelley (now serving 13 years for sedition), in the Defender, published by Gerald R. Winrow (indicted for conspiracy to overthrow the government), on the roll of honor of Scribner's Commentator (one of whose editors, Ralph Townsend has now been convicted as a Japanese agent), America in Danger, published by Charles B. Hudson (indicted 3 times and put on trial for sedition), in The Broome, published by C. Leon B. Aryan (ex-inmate of an insane asylum, indicted for sedition) and by Joe McWilliams, now on trial for sedition. These are but a few of the members of the "vermin press" who have quoted Holman approvingly.

ASK HOLMAN why he voted AGAINST—(March 31, 1939) the bill to provide for the common defense by acquisition of strategic materials for use in time of war or emergency; (March 8, 1941) voted AGAINST the Lead-Lose Bill (Senator McNary led the Republicans who voted FOR the bill); (March 15, 1941) voted AGAINST the bill to authorize acquisition of merchant ships for national defense; (Nov. 7, 1941) voted AGAINST bill to permit arming of merchant vessels entering combat zones.

ASK HOLMAN why he voted FOR—(October 26, 1939) Amendment making it unlawful to export arms, ammunition and implements of war except to nations on the American continent.

ASK HOLMAN why he was ABSENT during the vote on these life-or-death measures—(March 7, 1939) Bill to provide for a more effective national defense; (Oct. 24, 1940) Bill to permit aircraft exports; (May 22, 1940) Bill to provide funds for National Defense Council; (June 19, 1940) Amendment to levy tax on war profits; (Aug. 28, 1940) Draft of Bill; (Aug. 7, 1941) Extension of Draft. During these and a hundred more vital bills why was Holman absent?

With America on the verge of war, newspaper story date lines showed Holman AWAY FROM WASHINGTON in June, July, August, September, October, November and December, 1941 (away at least part of the time during seven consecutive months). Why shouldn't we keep him away from Washington ALL the time?
