The Morse Victory

The Victory of Wayne L. Morse over Sen. Rufus Holman climaxed a sensational campaign, and the result will attract national attention. It will be acclaimed as a victory for the international viewpoint over the isolationist (or nationalist) viewpoint as represented by Sen. Holman. While there were numerous minor issues, this was the one on which the candidates represented clearcut divergence of opinion; and while many votes probably were swayed by the minor considerations the Morse victory will stand as a repudiation by Oregon Republicans of the position held by Sen. Holman on questions involving the participation of the United States in the war.

While bitterness was engendered in the course of the campaign, some of which may not heal, the principals in the contest were men of such courage and positiveness that a clash was regarded as inevitable. And protagonists of the candidates did not hesitate to take off their coats and lay on with vigor.

The Holman campaign backfired in the closing days because of the extravagance of the claims against Morse. The assertion for instance that Kaiser was keeping 100,000 employees for the purpose of defeating Holman was a patent absurdity, easily exploded by quoting the registration figures in shipyard areas.

The Morse campaign was the best organized and the best financed of any since the Julius Meier campaign in 1930. The generalship under Ralph D. Moores, and Charles P. Ohling was excellent; but Morse himself set the pace for his organization. He went at his job seriously and threw his whole self into it. He overcame great odds in building up an organization from zero; and his personal contacts and speeches won many converts.

What about November? Morse will face an able and honorable opponent in Edgar W. Smith, the democratic nominee. Their stand on the issue of international organization is the same however. While Morse may lose votes of some Holman Republicans who will not be reconciled to defeat of their candidate, he should pick up democratic labor votes which he missed in the republican primaries. Then the party pressure in order to obtain votes to capture control of the next senate will be applied in Morse's behalf. Given the summer for some of the wounds to heal the party breach may not be so serious when November rolls round, but the way Morse forged ahead in the primary campaign is a good augury for his success in November.

For centuries people have fallen asleep in church, but it remained till the present for the practice to get a name — narcolepsy. The scientist says this sleep is caused by the urge to escape what the preacher is saying. The same result could be obtained, though more conspicuously, by staying away from church.

Interpreting The War News

By KIRKE L. SIMPSON
Copyright 1944 by the Associated Press

Starting allied successes scored in Italy in the curtain raiser for the opening battle of Europe are matched by events across the Pacific no less ominous for Japan.

Developments of last week made clear that the hit-fitter first program is being carried to its logical conclusion without prejudice to prosecution of the Anglo-American-Chinese war against Japan. In the far Pacific, in Burma, in the Dutch Indies, even in long suffering China, progress is being made toward a day of reckoning with Tokyo's war lords despite immediate concentration of allied effort in the European theater.

Even the first junction of allied forces in the Pacific and the Indian oceans has been achieved by air over Java. That means that the last gap in the allied ring about the Nipponese China sea conquest zone had been air-closed.

For immediate purposes, however, it was in upper Burma and the Yunnan province of China that the most significant events of the Asiatic theater were recorded. Desperate attempts by Japan to prevent or delay reopening of adequate communications with China have been foiled in India. The powerful and reasonably well equipped Chinese army in Yunnan is on the march westward, undeterred by a still developing enemy offensive in Honan.

Early opening of a supply route from India to China via the Ledo road is in prospect. The Yunnan troops and General Stilwell's mixed forces in upper Burma are 60 miles or less apart, air line. Disaster threatens Japanese troops opposing them.

Tokyo is fully aware of just what an actual junction of the two forces to reopen land traffic with Chungking armies would mean for Japan. Japanese radio broadcasts have been jittery for weeks with expectations of American bombing attacks from China on Japan itself, and on all its key bases about the China sea.

The abortive "invasion" of India from upper Burma aimed at Stilwell's supply lines was a desperate attempt to ward off or minimize that threat to the home land. It is possible that even the Japanese offensive in Honan had the same motivation in part, that it was designed to force Chungking to call the Yunnan army northward and thereby defer indefinitely completion of the Ledo road.

Chinese military spokesmen see another and even graver significance for the enemy in that north China Japanese offensive. They believe it can be traced to Tokyo realization in the light of stunning shipping losses that the traffic lanes of the China sea cannot long continue to serve their needs. The only alternative is establishment of rail communication in China from Peiping to Canton.

Whatever the real motive of the Japanese in the Honan operation, however, it has not checked the allied-Chinese Burma operations. And, meanwhile, General MacArthur has pushed his New Guinea spring-board for return to the Philippines another stride northwest up the coast of the big island. His air power has been brought forward until virtually no Nipponese base around a circle that reaches from southeastern Mindanao in the Philippines through Celebes island and down through Timor off the northwestern coast of Australia beyond reach of his heavy bombers.

City Election

Mayor Doughton merited reelection which he has received by a comfortable margin. He has given the city an informed, business-like administration. The defeat of the city manager plan is by a smaller majority than in former attempts to pass such a measure, which gives some hope that eventually the city will get round to modernizing its old charter.

The city will get into the pension business with its firemen as a result of adopting the pension proposal. A general retirement system for public employees should be provided, but the legislature has failed to make such provision, and congress has so far refused to include employees of government in its social security plan. It is to be hoped that the pension plan is actually sound. In the past some pension plans have bogged down, as in Portland, because the financial set-up wasn't right.

The John Henry Nash collection of rare books and fine printing which was housed at the University of Oregon on loan for some years, has been purchased by the Ray family (Ray oil burners) and presented to the University of California. Oregon wasn't able to raise the money Nash demanded for his collection so it has gone to California.

The French are fighting the boche again and cracked the south end of the Gustav line. Polish infantry stormed Monastery hill at Cassino and British troops aided in the capture of the city. Only a few references have been made to American forces. Perhaps they have been withdrawn for action elsewhere. Seasoned troops will be needed when the western front is opened.

News Behind The News

By PAUL MALLON

WASHINGTON, May 21 — The final destruction of the intellectual position of the progressive education trust has been accomplished by the Birmingham, Alabama, Teachers association bulletin.

What happened there is a typical example applicable in varying degrees to the rest of the country.

The trust crowd apparently was powerful and dominant and went after me roughly for my persistent proofs that they had broken down discipline and scholarship in the schools and weakened the country intellectually with their disregard of facts - and - figures education, and their "greater-freedom-for-pupils" system.

An assistant superintendent, Theodore R. Wright, went before a First Methodist church forum with the most preposterous conceivable accusations against me - although I received my fundamental education in his elementary schools there 30 odd years ago. He went to the right place to make such scurrilous and pitiful defense of his new system, because the crime of progressive education is equally great against all churches, and all religion.

You cannot teach free-running children to practice self-indulgence in the schools, and expect them to be good Methodists or good anything. The theories of self-indulgence and religious self-discipline are incompatible. I will handle him and his kind later - in detail.

They turned my newspaper there against me with deceptions. A local columnist named Fiederson wrote that I was a rather despicable person anyway because I was against the new deal (presumably the one Mr. Roosevelt announced was dead many months ago). One editorial writer twisted my remarks to make it appear I was against the teachers, trying to get the teachers to turn against me. Although the newspaper has published my column page one, column one for 12 years, the editors were forced or induced to remove it to an inside page, as if to let the trust say: "That will finish you, young fellow."

You can recognize these tactics? They are the common practices of villainy, the corrupt tactics of political machines, the kind of intellectual dishonesty you hardly expect of men assigned to teach truth and honor to the children of the nation.

But they are also signs of weakness. If they had any sound ground on which to stand, they would have displayed it, yet not a single inclination for honest denial of my facts appeared.

After all that campaign, the Birmingham Teachers association bulletin has just completed a poll of teachers there on the question.

"Do you in general agree or disagree with the Paul Mallon articles on education that have recently been appearing in the daily press?"

Every tenth teacher whose name appeared in the telephone book was called and assured her name would not be divulged. The bulletin says: "Four of the teachers hesitated to give their decision, until reminded no names would be used, then said: 'Oh well, I agree with Mr. Mallon, then.'"

The poll showed 79 per cent of the high school teachers in agreement with me, 22 out of the 28 polled. Only three disagreed and three would not commit themselves.

Of the 50 elementary grade teachers called, 22 were favorable to my position, 15 unfavorable, and nine on the fence. The BTA bulletin comments: "In general, those who taught the lower grades were nearly unanimous in condemnation of the Mallon articles, while those who taught the higher of the elementary grades were more likely to agree with him."

As a whole, 59 per cent of the teachers agreed, 24 per cent disagreed, while 19 per cent said they were not familiar with my articles or that they were on the fence and could not say either way. In short Mr. Wright's own teachers deny him.

The BTA bulletin published its poll under a heading: "Classroom teachers uphold Mallon criticism." It included: "The ones whose actual job it is to do the work, do not think progressive education works." As this is a specific proving example of a general condition of the country, of which I was already aware through my vast mail from teachers, I will present a further portion of the poll tomorrow, showing how the trust works to keep itself in power over the unwilling teachers.

Men Under 30 to Fill Draft Requirements Rest of Year

There probably will be enough men under 30 years of age in the United States to fill the anticipated requirements of both the army and navy during the remainder of this year, with most of the inductees under 25, Colonel Elmer V. Wooton, state selective service director, declared upon his return from Washington, DC, here Saturday.

While in Washington Wooton conferred with federal selective service officials. He indicated that a large number of men under 26 years of age would be taken from war jobs. "It is my opinion," Wooton declared, "that virtually every man under 26 years of age who is qualified for military duty will be in the armed forces within a few months."

Wooton said that men from 25 through 29 years of age, to be considered for deferment, must be engaged in war work. In cases where men are over 30 years the requirements will be lessened, Wooton said, provided they are employed in a useful occupation. A useful occupation does not necessarily mean war work, Wooton averred.

The state selective service director said military officials in Washington estimated that army and navy requirements would require 150,000 additional men each month. This number may be increased, he declared, provided fatalities in the coming invasion are higher than now anticipated.

"I do not want to give out the impression that men over 26 years of age will not be drafted," Wooton said, "because no person knows what may happen after a few months. If the government requires men over 26 years old they will be inducted." Wooton said Oregon is no different than other states and, through proper quota allocations by the federal government, will be able to provide a sufficient number of men under 26 years of age for the remainder of the current year.

Virtually every state in the nation was represented at the Washington conference of selective service officials, Wooton said.

More Victory Gardens Goal

Victory gardeners are urged to reflect on the fact that 40 per cent of the fresh vegetables produced in the United States in 1943 were produced by victory gardeners, reports County Agent W. G. Nibler.

The lifting of many ration restrictions on canned vegetables was made possible by this production. Present indications are that garden plantings will probably not be as great this year as last.

There is still plenty of time to plan and plant a garden and all people who have any space available should utilize it to the utmost for this purpose.

Information on planting and on pest control can be obtained at the county agent's office in the Postoffice building at Salem.
