

New Home Nursing Course Available to Salem Women

For busy Salem women, particularly those who work outside the homes they keep, a new short course in home nursing entitled "six lessons in care of the sick" taken from the Red Cross standard first aid course is now available. Mrs. Louise Arneson, Marion county Red Cross nursing services chairman, announced Thursday.

HERO—Lt. (jr) Ira C. (Ike) Keptford, USNR, of Muskegon, Mich., former Northwestern star backfield man, is a leading Navy pilot with a record of 16 Japanese ships knocked out.

Returning two weeks ago from Seattle, where for two weeks she had been a member of a class of 10 engaged in intensive training to become teachers of the course, Mrs. Arneson found two classes already registered and ready to commence their study. No publicity had been given to the innovation and first public announcement of its availability here is made today, but rumors have brought numerous inquiries to Red Cross offices, she said.

The course is designed to give employed homemakers essentials in care of the sick in the home and in prevention of communicable disease. It should teach them to recognize symptoms early and impress upon them the importance of getting the ill under treatment rapidly, Mrs. Arneson said Thursday. By proper care in the home, other members of the family may be protected, she said, pointing out that this is one of the reasons for offering the short course.

In Seattle, where Mary Gray, state nursing consultant and Mrs. Arneson were the only Oregonians in the class, Eula Butzer, director of public health nursing at the University of Chicago, served as master instructor. One of the two weeks was given over to instruction and study, the second to practice teaching.

Classes are limited to 10 members each, because of the demonstration features. The six two-hour classes must be completed within three weeks' time, may be compressed into one week.

Two groups of women, who were registered and waiting when Mrs. Arneson returned to Salem, are now completing the course. It will be offered again as soon as a full pupil complement has been registered. Registrations may be made by calling Miss Hazel Kirk, 7907, or Red Cross office, 9277.
