Grain Futures Drop Sharply

CHICAGO, June 7-(AP)-General selling which developed at the start of trading continued through today's session and all grain futures were down sharply at the close. Traders said yesterday's sharp rally had resulted from heavy short covering and weakened the technical position of the market.

Bearish sentiment was apparent throughout the day and some of the deferred deliveries of leading grains sold at new seasonal lows

There was a lull in the demand for flour but the principal factor in the break in wheat was the harvest, already under way in the southwest and showing yields that in some sections may average from 20 to 25 bushels an acre.

The government's June 1 report of crop conditions, to be released Friday, was expected to be much more optimistic than last month's and to indicate a yield of at least 700 million bushels of winter wheat. Substantial improvement in the prospects for other small grains also was anticipated.

Wheat closed 2 to 2% lower than yesterday, July $1.60%. Oats were off 1% to 1%, July 74%-1/4. Rye was off 21/4 to 31/4, July $1.05-1.061/4. Barley was 1 to 1% lower, July $1.19%.

Continued lack of demand for the large stocks of rye in storage at terminal cities and some pessimism regarding the export business caused weakness in the market for that grain. There was heavy liquidation of oats futures and prices eased quickly.
