Voice of the Warships

The air force gets the headlines and most of the news stories these days, as it has through most of the war. Planes of the United Nations in numbers that fill the skies like a plague of locusts have provided an air umbrella for the invading footsoldiers in Normandy and have methodically knocked out enemy communications and troop concentrations behind the lines. But a generous meed of praise is due the warships of the navy. For they cleared the sea and guarded the landing barges and supply boats. Minesweepers swept away enemy mines; destroyers policed the waters; grim old battleships came close inshore to shell enemy strong points and silence enemy batteries.

It was naval gun power which afforded protection to the men wading ashore from the barges. It was far more effective than aerial bombardment because it can be continued on given targets. Thus when observers ashore radioed back to the ship that an enemy battery was holding up the advance, giving its location, the ship's guns could be trained on the spot and soon it would be blown to pieces. Command of the seas meant not only control of the waters so our invasion armada could cross the channel; it meant also fire-cover for the landing elements for miles inland. The battleships knocked out the shore batteries of the Germans and held at bay their counter attack so our beachhead could be secured.

Used in this operation were older warships. One for instance was the old dreadnaught Warspite which fought in the Atlantic and off Crete and then limped across the Pacific for repairs at Bremerton. Now it is back in the fight throwing heavy slugs at the enemy. The USS Arkansas, Texas and Nevada are old ships dating from 1911 to 1914, but their guns, 12-inch on the Arkansas and 14-inch on the other two, can still speak with authority. The British ships Rodney and Nelson, with 16-inch guns are veterans of the British navy and battle-scarred from this war. These older vessels could do the job in the narrow waters of the channel and if one or more should be hit and sunk the loss would not be so great as with the newer, speedier battleships.

At any rate, the surface ships have played a vitally important part in the invasion of France, just as they have in safeguarding the sea-lanes that are Great Britain's lifelines.

Night Club Tax

Congress has passed a bill with a tacker cutting the tax on night club bills from 30 per cent to 20 per cent. The claim was offered that the higher rate (a boost from the 10 per cent of the old law) was putting the night clubs out of business for lack of patronage. Though General Somervell in his cry for more manpower in war industry had said: "If we have to close the night clubs, let's lock them up," congress did not seem to agree with the necessity.

Night clubs appear to come under the head of "essential war industry"—essential to the plush-bottomed generals and captains, to the plush-pursed industrialists, and to boobs from the sticks.

Keep the swivel in your neck lubricated, and don't freeze your gaze on Europe. Gen. MacArthur and Admiral Nimitz may loosen a big punch in the Pacific just by way of diversion.

Chairman Davis says that the war labor board should be allowed to die a natural death at the end of the war. But here are John L. Lewis and Sewell Avery trying to strangle it to death before the war does end.

Season and Bag Limits

Fixing season and bag limits by the game commission gives local sportsmen's groups a chance to make recommendations on what rules should be drawn up for hunting in their localities. This year the Klamath-Lake sportsmen succeeded in getting the commission to cut out doe killing in their district. They have steadily objected to the killing of doe there, but for several years it has been permitted under restrictions.

On the other hand the Bend folk want to open up antelope hunting in central Oregon. The antelope have increased in numbers so fast on the Hart mountain refuge that they are ranging far to the north and west, and stockmen would like to see their number diminished—"curtailed" might be the word, except they are already bob-tailed.

The commission has a hard time appeasing the fishermen and hunters whose ideas often clash. There are many cracker-barrel experts on fish and game who have all the answers. As the sportsmen's groups extend and include more members there ought to be better organization of lay opinion which will be of more value to the commission and be of greater benefit in conserving of wild life.

News Behind The News

By PAUL MALLON

(Distribution by King Features Syndicate, Inc. Reproduction in whole or in part strictly prohibited.)

WASHINGTON, June 12 — The unresolved conflict between the four freedoms and radical ideologies which is apparent behind the confusing political news from abroad is also conspicuous behind much domestic news and interpretation.

Paul Mallon

The leftist journals are currently campaigning for the Beveridge - proposed "way of life" in Britain, with the critical demand that it also be pursued here. They think that is what the four freedoms mean, assumption by the state of more complete authority over the lives of men economically, fixing their wages, their employment, their security rather than encouraging the individual to do it himself on his own initiative. That is the kind of peace and post-war planning they want.

But we have campaigned this war through to a point near victory on the basis of bringing liberty and democracy for the individual both here and abroad. Is their thinking now not as confused and as far wrong as it was a few months ago when they were campaigning for a quart of milk a day and labor-wage standards to be fixed throughout the world?

What is liberty? What is democracy? What is freedom of the individual? If we do not first decide that, how can there be anything but confusion about post-war planning?

To me, an individual enslaved to a state economically by taxation or otherwise, is no less a slave than if controlled politically. In a dictatorship, his life is no more free than the conscience and ability of the man who happens to be running the state at any given time.

If he has a democratic form, he is still no more free than by whatever degree his president and congress are free from domination by minority class groups and interests. In the religious sense, he is not free if he is dominated by any class group either. Domination by one religion or by atheism is equally far from any democratic ideology.

The radicals see this, but this part of it only. How can they expect anyone to believe domination brings economic freedom when they see so well it does not bring religious freedom. They could not consider the world politically free if it was dominated by one world power, at least no one else would. Oneness domination never yet has achieved freedom or liberty or democracy in any way.

What we would like to have is complete freedom for all peoples in all ways, economically, politically, religiously. This always has proved too idealistic a goal for the world to achieve utterly, but by whatever further progress we make in that direction, the peace will be successful. By whatever measure we compromise it, the peace will fail.

We were drawn deeper into what measure of collectivism we already had before this war only to meet failures. The ideal was not voluntarily espoused as the proper way of life. It was not what we wanted. It was what we had to take. Entering the war, we assumed the additional collectivism only for war.

Our course in that direction should be pursued in the post-war peace only to whatever extent it will bring true justice to the individual. The star of individual freedom should never be eclipsed one inch by collectivism as our ideal.

Our success in this war was not due to collectivism but to voluntary democratic cooperation by all hands. To whatever extent labor sacrificed its rights to strike, it expects to get that right back, and so with all of us.

Internationally we did not win by collectivism either, but by truly democratic cooperation. One nation did not dominate the military decisions of how to proceed with the fighting. This democratic way is working well against a nation which practiced collectivism and preached subservience of the individual to the state.

These are rudiments of simple common sense for peace. If we wish to dispel confusion and plan our way, we must first define our words and understand our goals. We must decide that, internationally or domestically, the star of real liberty must be maintained as indispensable.

We must abhor collectivism as an ideal, and compromise with it reluctantly and temporarily only to the extent truly necessary to bring justice to the individual.

We must abhor oneness domination, totalitarianism, dictatorship, and remember always that an individual enslaved to the state by any means whatever will have no more liberty and democracy than the fluctuating goodness and justice of that controlling force.

Men do not take well that kind of power either as heads of worlds or any of the subdivisions of society including nations, states, counties, cities, or even labor unions.

Interpreting The War News

By KIRKE L. SIMPSON

Copyrignt 1944 by the Associated Press

Just one week after their take off from Britain by air and sea, allied forces were within sight of their first prime second-front objective, capture of the Cherbourg peninsula.

They had out-guessed and out-fought the nazi on ground of his own choosing, long-prepared for resistance to invasion. A 60-mile wide gap in his coastal defenses yawned. Through it allied reserves poured under blanket protection in air and on the sea. The Cherbourg peninsula nazi bastion was certainly doomed. Even the enemy hold on its great Brittany neighbor, tipped by the fine port of Brest was gravely threatened by an American infantry breakthrough 20 miles deep in the center of the beachhead line to the gates of St. Malo.

With fall of the Normandy foreland seemingly imminent, giving the allies use of Cherbourg to speed up movement of troops and heavy equipment to the continental battle fronts, the situation of the German garrison in Brittany will be ominous. It may be the next Eisenhower objective, backed by forward air bases just across St. Malo gulf in Normandy. Its capture would double allied weather-proof communication facilities in France.

Failure of the foe to prevent landings in Normandy or to seal the first beachheads off effectively with available reserves has already created an acute problem for the German high command. Neither its local reserves nor the first waves of tactical reinforcements have served to halt the Anglo-American advance through Normandy. The tone of official announcements from allied great headquarters indicates astonishment at the relatively poor defensive showing of the foe up to date.

For there is a growing danger to the German position in all northwestern France, from the Seine to the Loire, to be seen in the now well consolidated invasion dent. Even Paris is menaced with British forces on the allied left of line at encircled Caen less than 100 miles from the French capitol.

Sooner or later, due to nazi failure to repel the allied landings in Normandy, a major decision upon retreat in France to shorten defense lines will be forced upon Berlin. The enemy is already revealing the weaknesses of over-extension in the west as his Russian front disclosed similar fatal defects once the Soviet army was ready to open its year long offensive all along the line.

IT SEEMS TO ME

a buyer or seller. We have all heard tales of what old heaps with tens of thousands of miles on them but still with an engine and fair rubber will bring. But here is one story of the buyer-seller angle:

I fell in with a traveling salesman who told me he had just bought a new car because his old car, a Pontiac, had run well over 100,000 miles. He was complaining about the cost of the new Chevvie he bought after getting the necessary priority. "No chrome except the bumpers, painted door-handles,—and $1265."

Then I asked him what he got for his four-year old Pontiac with its big mileage record. "A thousand dollars," he replied—I thought a bit sheepishly.

It still makes quite a difference which side of the counter you are on.

Bible Schools Draw 363 on First Day

The first day of the two-week Bible schools being sponsored by the Salem Ministerial association drew 363 enrollees Monday, according to a survey made. Englewood United Brethren church listed 125, Highland Friends 53, Jason Lee 65, First Baptist 50, and Leslie Methodist 70. Because of a shortage of teachers, no school was held at the Knight Memorial church.

The schools will be held five times a week for two weeks.

ROSEBURG, June 12.—(AP)—Mrs. William G. Rednius, 44, Tenmile, died in a hospital here today from a skull fracture received when a horse she had just bought at auction threw her to the pavement.

Air Line Sets New Record

A new record for passenger operations over its nationwide system was attained by United Air Lines last month, according to estimated figures released today by Harold Crary, vice-president in charge of traffic.

Despite the fact that the company still is operating with considerably less equipment than it had before Pearl Harbor — even after the return of a number of planes from military service in recent weeks—United flew 37,981,200 revenue passenger miles in May as compared with 28,764,996 in the same month of last year, a gain of 32 per cent. Airplane miles flown totaled 2,425,300 as against 1,762,016 in May, 1943, an increase of 15 per cent. In addition to passenger gains, there was also a considerable increase in cargo carried, said Crary.

Greater utilization of equipment and improved methods of maintenance were cited as accountable for a high percentage of the increase.

Draft Pooling Said Efficient

Saturday's order of the federal selective service headquarters in Washington, DC., pooling men subject to induction into military service after passing their physical examinations, will not increase the burdens of Oregon draft officials, Elmer V. Wooton, state selective service director, declared here Monday.

Under the previous system men who had passed their physical examination and were subject to induction were earmarked either for the navy or army. Under the latest order these men will be pooled and can be drawn for the navy or army, in event of a dearth of inductees for either branch of the service.

"It is my opinion that the so-called pool will operate to the advantage of selective service officials and induction boards." Wooton said.

McKenzie Pass Opened

The McKenzie pass highway was opened for traffic early Monday after being closed during the winter months because of snow, state highway department officials here announced.

State traffic recently resumed as far as McKenzie bridge, detouring there by way of Clear Lake road to the Santiam highway, all-year route to Bend.

16-Year-Old Lad Weds Widow, 37

VANCOUVER, Wash., June 12 (AP)— A 16-year-old boy was married here today to a 37-year-old widow for whom he previously worked as a chauffeur.

Ronald Smith, 16, the tall, curly haired groom, said their attractions started with mutual interest in hunting and fishing. The bride, Mrs. Mary Ellen Breon, said "It was love at first sight." Both are from Siletz, Ore.

She has two children, one and three years old.
