Community Cannery All Set to Go

Salem's Community Cannery Opens Monday; New Machinery Proves Aid in Trial Runs

Salem's one-year-old community cannery which opens for public operation Monday morning was the scene of much activity this past week as it received an extensive "face-lifting" job, completed with the addition of new machinery and facilities which rank it with the best in the entire state.

The basis of operation will be fashioned after that of an assembly line. Smooth running operation is virtually assured what with the installation of a new drainage system, and several new wash and preparation tables.

Anyone is welcome to use the plant, the only prerequisites being that you bring along your own produce, that you prepare it, blanch it, fill the furnished cans and use your own syrups. After that trained experts will assist you in the remainder of the process.

Each individual is allowed 100 cans and a family of four will be allowed 400 cans of produce. Number 2 cans are sold at cost price of 6 cents while No. 2½ cans are issued to the patrons at 7½ cents each.

More than 150,000 cans were run through the automatic sealer last year and that figure was obtained with one small and two large retorts. This year four large cookers like the one shown in the above photo will handle 180 cans each. Other new equipment includes blanching and exhaust vats, additional sealers, steam jacket kettles, a hot water tank, additional preparation tables and an up-to-date drainage system.

Trial runs were highly successful last week, according to William McKinny who will direct the cannery's operation this year. He replaces Neal Craig who is taking a leave of absence from the public school system here.

McKinny's co-workers will include Mrs. Maybelle Burch, home economics instructor at Parrish junior high school and Mrs. Genevieve Olson, both of whom will assist the patrons in preparing food. Among the personnel caring for the machines are Kirby Brumfield, assistant state supervisor of food production for war training in the state division of vocational education. George Brant, vocational head at Salem high school, will operate one of the retorts.

The cannery is under the auspices of the Salem public schools, Frank B. Bennett, superintendent, and cooperating with the state department of vocational education, Earl R. Cooley, director. It is located at 3060 Portland road in the Bonesteel building, just north of the underpass.

Her parents were advised to take her to a physician for a thorough examination.

Falls on Bottle—Jerry Litze, 12 months, fell on a bottle at his home, 1055 South 13th street Friday, and cut a two-inch gash in his forehead. City first aid men put a temporary dressing on the baby and had his parents take him to a physician.

Welfare Clubs Show Ways They Operate

The story of how a hypothetical family, downed by circumstance, could be adjusted to normal, happy living by cooperation of various agencies was told by workers in these agencies at Friday noon's luncheon meeting of Marion County Social Workers' club at the Salem YMCA.

Introducing the middle-aged parents with six children, one of whom had found poor companionship in new surroundings as the family followed crops, Marion Bowen, administrator for the Marion county public welfare commission, also brought into the picture other agencies of social work.

How the public health department assisted the family with a known case of illness and how its workers discovered health problems were the cause of other troubles was told by Mrs. Plett, public health nurse.

Orpha Dasch, Red Cross social worker, explained that many men in the service are ill-informed or ignorant of the government's provision for the parents and brothers and sisters as she told of how the Red Cross could aid the family under discussion. Joseph Silver, state parole officer, came into the picture as the means of getting the miscreant son out of the penitentiary and into a life where he could adjust himself to honest living.

Ether Little, YWCA secretary, explained how the children of the family could become part of the community life and find avenues of enjoyable service through her own and other character-building organizations. Merwyn Darby of the health department was program chairman.
