

Quality Meat Raised by 4-H Will Go to Armed Forces

Editor's Note: In Marion county, where 4H club boys and girls expect to sell 50 or more animals at a Lions-sponsored auction late in August or early in September, there is special interest in this story of how purchasers may route on to the US armed forces the meat these purchased without recourse to ration point book-keeping.

Members of American fighting forces may receive the choicest meats produced by 2,000,000 youths under a plan announced today, which provides that quality meat animals—beef, pork, lamb and mutton—raised by young American farmers will be made available to the armed forces.

The plan has been set up by the US office of education of the federal security agency and the office of price administration working with the quartermaster corps of the US army, which buys the meat products.

The army will award a certificate of appreciation to young livestock growers who qualify for the distinction. The certificate of appreciation will be signed by Maj. Gen. E. R. Gregory, the quartermaster general of the US army.

The following joint statement was issued by Judge Marvin Jones, war food administrator; Paul V. McNutt, federal security administrator; and Chester Bowles, price administrator:

"Under sponsorship of the department of agriculture and the federal security agency, farm boys and girls are encouraged to raise a superior quality of livestock. These young farmers are members of the 4H clubs and the Future Farmers of America. There are 75,513 4H clubs having an active membership of 1,700,000. FFA has a membership of 250,000 who receive advanced instruction in agricultural subjects through the US office of education in co-operation with the public schools.

"Until America entered the World War, both organizations participated in thousands of livestock fairs and other educational activities held throughout the United States. These events have been supported by individuals, meat companies, packers, ranchers, trade associations and others interested in encouraging young America to produce a steadily improving breed of farm animals.

"Under wartime conditions certain necessary controls governing the sale and purchase of livestock and meat products threatened to handicap the support, particularly of individuals, of these organizations. This was a serious matter which livestock producers and the government—including the armed forces—felt we should not permit to come to pass. Consequently, a thorough study of the situation was made by the various agencies under the chairmanship of Walter F. Straub, OFA food director.

"The two war programs that threatened to discourage 4H club and FFA livestock production were price control and rationing. Prior to wartime controls, sponsors could bid as high as they wanted for animals produced by the 4H club boys and FFA members. Under price control they could not go above ceiling prices set for dressed products. Many had bought animals on the hoof, and had them slaughtered and processed, thereby taking care of their food requirements for some time in the future. Under rationing they did not have enough points to follow this procedure.

"An amendment to the stabilization act permitted sponsors to bid on these animals at any price they cared to pay without prejudice regarding possible subsidy benefits. However, it was stipulated that the buyers must sell dressed products for not more than a ceiling price. This meant, of course, that they would be out of pocket for the difference between ceiling prices for meat and the price paid the boy who raised the animal. However, purchasers were willing to absorb this expense as a means of encouraging production of quality livestock.

the department of agriculture,

"Leeway for individuals to slaughter these quality animals even though they lack the points to purchase the dressed meats under rationing was provided through an arrangement worked out with the quartermaster general's office of the US army. Under this plan youthful growers of livestock may stipulate that sponsors who bid in their animals shall have them slaughtered, and, provided they pass federal meat inspection standards, routed to the army for consumption by soldiers, sailors, marines or coast guardsmen. No ration points are involved for the buyer of the animal in such a transaction. This simple provision solves the rationing difficulty which threatened wartime interference with 4H club and FFA activities.

"The result of these changes means that the farm boys now will be encouraged to continue growing the best possible livestock that they know how to grow. Sponsors who want to encourage these youngsters will not be hampered by ceiling prices. Neither will ration points serve as a brake on 4H club and FFA activities.

"Topping off the plan, the quartermaster general's office has agreed to issue a certificate of appreciation to the 4H club member or FFA youth who raises animals of high meat quality.

"The army's certificate of appreciation, signed by Maj. Gen. E. R. Gregory, the quartermaster general of the US army, will give young farmers recognition for their meritorious work."

Park Area Gets Name

A recreational area, located at the head of Wood river on the Yawkey tract near Fort Klamath will be named the Jack Kimball recreational area, the state forestry department announced here Wednesday.

The recreational area will include approximately 20 acres. The forestry board has postponed naming the state forest on the same tract. A number of residents have suggested the name of Kimball for this forest while others would name it for the late Sen. Charles L. McNary.
