Done in Oil

The state department of geology and mineral industries (what a ponderous title!) warns investors against "upson promotional oil ventures." Evidently promoters think a new crop of suckers has been born, as no doubt it has, since the heyday of the 1920's. And what in this century has had such a lure as oil? This source of quick wealth has taken the place of gold which in the previous century drew thousands of prospectors to California, to Colorado, to Nevada, to the Yukon. It is easier to prospect for oil too, in the modern manner. One merely buys stock in some oil promotion, and then sits back to wait for the gusher of oil and of dividends.

With $22 billions of currency afloat, with savings banks swollen with one percent money, with war bonds in every home, the materials are in hand for a season of goose-plucking. The sharpers who devise ways to separate people from their money will scheme to get their hands on this accumulation of wealth,—and what better bait than oil stock?

Alas, for the promoters, there are many barricades put in their way by government for the protection of the unsophisticated investor. In this state only registered and qualified engineers are permitted to make official reports on oil or mineral prospects. Stocks can be sold only after registration with the corporation commissioner and in conformity with his requirements. The custom of this department is to have a report from the department of geology indicating a favorable prospect in the lands being developed. So the state goes just as far as it can to insure investors a "run for their money."

It would be a mistake however to regard qualification of securities as any guarantee that the venture will prove profitable. There are still the risks as to amount of oil or mineral to be found and of expenses of operation. Only those who can afford to lose should gamble in speculative enterprises such as wildcat oilwells of mining prospects.

At the same time unless there is adventure and speculation, business becomes sterile. We must have a constant flow of capital into new enterprise. That is the way our gains have been obtained. Both the prospector and the one who grubstake him are necessary for our progress though today these figures are less colorful than in the storied past. We must not raise barricades for speculation too high.

Luncheon for Three

Did they break out a bottle of rare champagne when the German general and the German admiral were guests, by compulsion, of the American general at lunch at the latter's headquarters on the Cherbourg battlefield? Probably not, for it was not a day for the Germans to raise a toast to. They had taken a licking from the Americans, and must have felt crestfallen. One was a lieutenant general, Carl Wilhelm Von Schlieben, commander of the fortress of Cherbourg; the other an admiral, Walther Hennecke, German naval commander of the harbor. The latter had been decorated by Hitler for his work in "demolishing the port." No doubt a pleasant time was had by all... the Americans present.

Interpreting The War News

By WILLIAM FRYE
Associated Press Staff Writer
(Substituting for Kirke L. Simpson)

Reports from Switzerland, as yet unconfirmed in other quarters, suggest the nazis may intend to abandon all of Italy, fighting only such delaying actions as will let them pull the bulk of their forces behind the Alps in good order.

These reports mention a number of factors which would seem to indicate such a purpose on the part of the German high command—departure of fascist officials, increasingly effective activity by Italian resistance groups, apparent withdrawal of some German troops, diminishing supply shipments into Italy.

A withdrawal would lower the German prestige somewhat at home and in the satellite countries, but most of that prestige which was concerned with Italy disappeared when the allies entered Rome.

From a military viewpoint, Germany might gain considerably by getting out of Italy as quickly as possible.

The Appennine Lind line from Pisa to Rimini is the last naturally strong defensive position below the Alps, and it would not be easy to hold against armies with the offensive drive demonstrated by the allied forces in the Italian peninsula.

German airpower already has been eliminated for all practical purposes from Italy. Allied bombers have effectively neutralized such air bases as the Luftwaffe still possesses in the Po valley.

That means Germany could give no cover to supply trains and motor convoys which, to feed a mountain defense line with men and equipment, would have to move over highly vulnerable routes. The nazis already have known the bitter taste of that situation at the Gustav line below Rome.

Moreover, if the nazis propose to hold the Pisanini line, they must not only keep in Italy 25 or 30 divisions there, but allocate some of their already-thin strategic reserves as replacements for Italy. If they withdraw, they not only free those reserves, but they probably add to their strategic reserves most of the divisions now committed in Italy.

For a long time, the industrial resources of northern Italy were sufficient reason for clinging to that region. With native resistance groups growing bolder and more destructive, however, sabotage and slowdowns may have reached such proportions that the trickle of Italian production is no longer worth the effort.

Allied gains would be impressive, but not decisive. The unification and restoration of Italy could be completed in a fashion to lend positive support to the United Nations. The allies probably could increase their assistance to partisan forces in Yugoslavia. Most important, a German evacuation of Italy would free the great bulk of the allied armies in the peninsula for use elsewhere.

Labor Stability

While the war labor board has again rejected demands of northwest woodworkers for wage increases it is not probable that a fresh strike will ensue. The workers staged a "demonstration" holiday over Memorial day but they went back to work. There is nothing now to be gained for themselves by staying off the job, and they are too patriotic to close down the mills indefinitely. Besides their present wages are pretty good in comparison with wages of former years.

But there is point to the complaint of Kenneth Davis, AFL official, in the high profits and "uncontrolled prices" enjoyed by the employers. The prices are controlled, but they have been high enough to yield huge profits under the full capacity of operation. And the mills will have plenty left when the taxes are paid. There's no 15 percent limit on increase of profit over 1941.

News Behind The News

By PAUL MALLON

CHICAGO, June 29—This coming Dewey presidential campaign is likely to surprise the country. Not unlike the earlier Mr. Roosevelt he has novel ideas (though not the same ideas). He does not work in political grooves, is far from party bound.

He scares the oldtime politicians a little, because his methods are different, although his inside record at this convention shows surprisingly few mistakes.

To give you the closeup picture, consider his designation of a woman as his leader on the platform committee. Lawyers and politicians haggle hours over words in these platform meetings and this time sat up all night at it as usual.

A sharper in words is usually a candidate's choice for that task. Dewey chose small, pleasant gray haired Miss Mary Donlin, a New York attorney, to represent him. She was last out of the meeting at 5:30 a. m.

But to go deeper than this example, there were three factions within that committee as indeed within this whole convention—not Deweyites, Bricker boys, Stassen men, etc., but a group of senators, a clan of governors and a third crowd of just plain delegate political workers from back home.

The governor's clan, representing 26 states, considers itself more important politically than the senators, and got its gumption up to such an extent that the senators listen to them.

However, governors are not up on the national issues to the extent that the senators are, who handle them daily. In fact the governors seemed to have little to complain about and apparently they just wanted recognition for themselves rather than any special viewpoint.

In this conflict, Dewey seems to have largely let the senators write the declaration of party principles. Taft of Ohio, Danaher of Connecticut and Millikin of Colorado did most of it. Through Miss Donlin and otherwise, Dewey exercised mainly a negative influence, vetoing words, phrases, some ideas.

Actually this platform is just the party's preparation for the candidate to take over. Some political assessors are now reading great hidden meanings into the thinly shaved words which were adopted. As usual, and particularly in the case of the footloose Mr. Dewey, they are wasting their time. What he reads into the platform, especially what he wants to do about it later is what the platform will be.

One sentence particularly awaits his interpretation, the one promising that the world organization will take "effective cooperative means to direct peace forces to prevent or repel military aggression." Police force, directly or indirectly? Sovereignty. Some experts think this phrase is a sleeping termite in the international plank.

At any rate Dewey is not the type to be content with generalities and phrase compromises when he sits in the top chair. Personally I expect him to be a lot more liberal than the country suspects. I think he will strive for an enlightened common sense liberalism as distinct from the sheer political liberalism which thinks for instance a poll tax is still important (I mean the Willkie type of political liberalism). It will champion greater social security, for instance, and more state medical aid instead of the New Deal's socialized medicine.

On international affairs, I expect him to be neither internationalist nor isolationist. I think his goal is "realism," realism in regard to Russia, to the rise of Communists in European leadership, in regard to British empire trade necessities, considering the developments which will arise in connection with a world organization.

On the surface of the platform adopted here and Dewey's international declarations, there appears to be democratic-republican unity on foreign policy, but this is only a mutual acceptance of democratic principles (sovereignty, etc.)

There will be a break between Roosevelt and Dewey on these matters when the administration starts applying these principles in action. I doubt if Dewey will consider them in accord with the formula.

His labor stand will likewise surprise you. The CIO political action crowd has made the front pages look like Dewey is anti-labor. Fact is he has gotten along well with union labor in New York state. What he did not get along with was the radical element in and out of labor.

Now the radicals peculiarly in this campaign are idealistically in the same boat as reactionaries, including the international bankers.

Both the leftist and conservatives wanted "one world" or "union now," a world state, a quart of milk a day, etc. Between these two is a great portion of labor and also the average citizen. The American Federation of Labor, for instance, is ideologically, just about where I expect Dewey will wind up on labor (strongly anti-communist.)

On the other issues in the head of the man in the street, although these are not really issues, except as politicians have made political footballs of them, I have heard a New York republican leader claim Dewey will get a million Jewish votes in New York City and much intellectual negro support.

He has a nucleus of a working organization ready to start. His advisers generally have long been chosen are in the crowd around him now.

It is possible they may become too clanish as the campaign develops, and too lawyerish but they will have to rely in nearly all the states on the local republican organizations (he has no state political leaders of his own) and this no doubt will prevent his men from becoming too independent.
