Salvage Tonnage Told—Marion county contributed 10.8 pounds of waste paper per person to the salvage campaigns from November, 1943, through June, 1944, reports from state salvage committee headquarters reveal. Thirty tons went from Marion county last month into plants which can use such paper, while 51 were taken from the county in May to bring the total for the eight months to 372 tons. Benton has sent 49.9 pounds of paper per capita back into manufacturing, and Lane, the only other county besides Multnomah with a larger total tonnage than Marion, has sent 12.2 pounds per person. Multnomah, with 2904 tons salvaged, has provided 19.2 pounds per resident.

Money Bag Missing—Just what has become of a money bag belonging to H. F. Marsh, proprietor of the Salem Vintage store, is still a mystery after a search Tuesday. Marsh says the money bag, partially full, was in an empty beer case. The beer truck driver who picks up the "empties" each day was known to have taken several on his regular trip but after inquiry and search no information concerning the money bag was available.

Trailblazer's Fifth Issue Off Presses

CAMP ADAIR, July 4—Trailblazer magazine No. 5 was ready for distribution Friday, June 30, at the Camp Adair PX news stands at 25 cents a copy, postage free, if the GI mailed it at any 70th division mail box.

The new Trailblazer is strictly "infantry"—from the cover montage titled "Infantry—Queen of Battles" to the back cover picture which depicts recent launching of the first ship ever named for an infantry division. This was the "SS Trailblazer," shown as men of the 274th and 882nd saw her slide down the ways at Swan Island shipyard in Portland.

A crack series of pictures taken on ranges and combat reaction courses, a two-page layout on APO 461, and a section devoted to miscellaneous shots around the post are included in the 70th division magazine.

Also recorded are the visits of Gen. George C. Marshall, Gen. John Millikin and the visit May 14 of the Jack Benny troupe at Camp Adair.

Milt Caniff's famed and glamorous Miss Lacey, a page of Oregon's prettiest damsels, and many cartoons by artists of the 70th are included in the Trailblazer.

Emerson Sees Bad Shortage Of Teachers

A teacher shortage more serious than in 1943 was portended today in a statement by D. A. Emerson of the state educational department. "Profiting by last year's experience, we are losing no time in urging school district officials to complete their teaching staffs for the 1944-45 school year," Emerson said. He indicated it might be necessary to consolidate additional small school districts.

Emerson said it required approximately 8000 teachers to fill all teaching positions in the public schools under present conditions. Last year, 900 emergency teaching certificates were issued, mostly to retired teachers who reentered the classrooms and those from outside the state. This number has increased to 1000.

Last year at this time there were more than 100 teaching vacancies in Oregon schools. Emerson said most of the teachers who have left schools during the past two years have entered military service or accepted higher salaried jobs.

War Prisoner Equipment Reaches Goal

Almost all of the 225 cases of materials shipped to the Far East late in 1943 for the use of United Nations war prisoners and civilian internees have now been accounted for, according to Information Charles A. Sprague, president of the Oregon War Chest, has just received from the National War Fund.

In the shipment were baseballs and bats, softballs, and other athletic equipment, musical instruments, phonographs, records and needles, games, and more than 15,000 books of all kinds. Distribution of the cases was as follows: 105 were unloaded at the Philippine islands; 103 at Yokohama for use by war prisoners and internees in Japan, Korea and Formosa, and nine at Hongkong.

These cases were sent to the Far East on the Gripsholm when it sailed last year to effect an exchange between United Nations and axis personnel. The material was made available by War Prisoners Aid, YMCA, a participating service of the National War Fund and the Oregon War Chest, to which the Marion county War Chest has turned over part of its proceeds.

Children's Parade Steals Show As Throngs Border Streets

Salem streets rounded to marching and running feet Tuesday. The major Fourth of July parade, led by the 70th division band from Camp Adair and a retinue of army men and equipment, swung with military precision during the morning around its lengthy line of march where throngs greater than any Salem holiday crowd since the Centennial bordered streets. But the children's parade swept along a shorter route with such speed that smiling adults beside it had difficulty in keeping up.

From the old-fashioned gentleman in high silk hat with his dainty blonde hoop-skirted lady to a camouflaged commando with blackened face, junior paraders in Salem entered the spirit of the celebration.

The young marchers walked off with more than $100 in war stamp prizes, given by the retail trade committee of Salem Chamber of Commerce. But they couldn't be given their awards until they had to be rounded up by anxious judges. For as the parade sped past the reviewing stand its participants literally fled to the park, where a truckful of ice-cream filled paper cups were ready to dispense promised free treats.

Monroe S. Cheek, Mrs. James T. Brand and Mrs. David Wright, judges, refused to differentiate between first and second places, bestowing only the fact that they could not present every youngster in the colorful parade with an envelope full of war stamps.

The prizes went to: Robert Pickering, dressed as a scarecrow in the Victory garden section of the parade.

Sharon Whitacre in pink hoop-skirt frock and Jerry Greene, who tipped his silk hat and smirked at the crowd from behind waxed mustaches.

Debbie Lamb, who wore on the back of her smart little Scotch kiltie outfit a sign "Say 'Aye' Bonds are a Buy" and her older sister Louise, also clad as a Scotch lassie, who led the scottie dog Geraldine.

Mary Evelyn Parke, grass-skirted island girl, and her marching companion Berta Van Brooks, Spanish gypsy who used her black face fan not as a shade for flirtatious eyes but to cool her bare feet as she trod the scorching pavement.

Jack Wikoff, whose blond spaniel in a cage looked not unlike a miniature lion.

Norman Hansel, who alternately led and was led by two silky white goats with yellow satin ribbons on their tails.

Doreen Cavender, dressed as a scarlet firecracker.

Wanda and Bobbie Banning, who wore bathing suits in a cool-looking vacation-time float.

Frank Beer, whose bicycle was handsomely decorated with Va.

armada built with PGE warpower showing some of the fighting ships built by shipyards which rely on PGE for the 'round-the-clock delivery of their warpower—

giant tankers
largest merchant ships built in the entire West; each of these fast tankers, on every trip, delivers millions of gallons of precious aviation gasoline or other fuel to our fighting forces overseas. The construction of every one of these ships requires millions of horsepower-hours of PGE warpower.

"floating airbases"
originally designed to serve merely as convoy-escorts, these carriers proved such powerful weapons that they are now given regular battle assignments. They are indispensable in current invasion drives. They demonstrate that PGE power on the production front produces fighting-power on the battlefronts.

deadly subchasers
they have had a big part in the tremendous job of driving the submarines out of the ocean lanes. Last year, hundreds of our merchant ships were sunk every month. Now it's a different story. Much of the equipment going into these subchasers has been manufactured with PGE warpower.

vital invasion craft
they make up the first line of offense. Invasion-craft being built with PGE warpower range in size from a capacity of a few dozen troops to a capacity of several hundred. The navy rates them as the most important of all its ships being built today. The shipyards require a steady surge of PGE warpower.
