Shrubbery Should Be Shunned

By MAXINE BUREN Visiting delegates to the state must find amusement in seeing dozens of citizens, going about their business as usual-well covered by a coating of dead white calcimine-like material. But it isn't funny to the poison oak sufferers. Only once in a while will we loyal Oregonians admit that anything but good grows in the state, but occasionally we must acknowledge that our grand climate produces other things than lush fields of grain and well filled orchard trees. This year we are having a bumper crop of poison oak. Whether or not there is a law against it (and there certainly should be) many roads are lined with the poison shrub, notably in Polk county. Last week we drove through some country lanes within a few miles of the city and found it impossible to keep limbs of the poison oak from wiping leaves on the car, so close did they grow across the road. The average person who is susceptible to the poisoning gets it only upon actual contact, but many super-sensitive individuals contract painful blisters from merely touching something that has come in contact with poison oak. Others are said to get it from breathing air from the bushes. We claim no medical knowledge of prevention of poison oak burns, but we do know how successful some of the old-fashioned preventive measure been in the past years. Good old fashioned yellow soap, rubbed directly on the skin when contact with poison oak has been suspected will often counteract the poison before it injures the skin. Other old timers find that by spreading a "paste of soda and water over areas exposed usually stops the There are modern preventatives, immunizing medicines to ! be taken through the skin or by mouth. There are serums that are given after the poisoning has been noted. These are highly successful with some folk.

guard against the painful burns Swegle Children of the poison, is to stay as far away from it as possible, and to take no chances.

Wild stories have been told about youngsters and even themselves "just to be smart." The results are often disastrous, for many persons have gone years without being affected, yet may be stricken with it later. No one is entirely safe, and the persons lucky enough to be temporarily immune should do all in their power to remain so.

Poison oak should keep no one from a good time in the woods, for susceptible persons are often those who spend the most time in the out-of-doors. Merely let us advise to be careful, and if you have been exposed to the poison in any way, take precauany possible contamination.

The Roast Returns

A Summer Menu Is Described

To cook and keep comfortable in summer is a simple task if meals are planned so most of the "cooking" is done with the refrigerator. Left-over portions of a roast may serve as the basis for these plans. In this way the meat which was actually cooked thed in the Waldo Hills in 1847 for one meal will serve for several others.

meat with a salad of cooked and fresh vegetables. But, cold roast Today's Menu meat platters might be served

Meat Salads Good

A meat salad is another main course which makes it possible to cook and be cool. Make this with left-over roast. The salad might be a tossed salad, for example: marinated meat, shredded cabbage and apple. Or the meat might be very finely chopped, combined with mayonnaise and celery and served as a stuffing for tomatoes or in a mound on a lettuce leaf.

Homemakers may keep cool even if they elect to serve the left-over roast as a hot dish, because in this case the meat needs only re-heating.

Any of these ways of serving the roast meat would taste good but often the deciding factor in their popularity with the family is making them look good too. Here is one suggestion for arranging an attractive cold roast meat platter.

Russian Salad Platter Left-over meats

1/2 cup peas 1/2 cup diced or grated carrots 12 cup celery

French dressing Fresh tomatoes Mayonnaise -

Cut the cooked meat into long narrow strips. Marinate the vegetables for 15 minutes in the French dressing. Then drain and arrange the vegetable mixture in lettuce cups in the center of the platter. Lay strips of meat in bundles around the edge. Garnish with slices of tomatos. Serve with mayonnaise dressing.
