Army Seeks High School Graduates

A new plan for continuance of education under the Enlisted Reserve Corps (unassigned) and the Air Corps Enlisted Reserve was available to qualified 17-year-old high school graduates today.

The program was explained here Friday by Capt. S. W. Rawls, jr., assistant chief, pre-induction training branch, 9th service command.

It is open to anyone who graduates from high school by the time he is 17 years and 8 months old.

Captain Rawls said the new plan differs from the former program in that students may take examinations at any time—not just twice a year—so that entrance into the basic college training under the Army Specialized Training Reserve program can be "practically continuous."

Applicants who pass examinations for the Air Corps Enlisted Reserve will have an option as to whether they attend college. Those under the Enlisted Reserve Corps (unassigned) will be sent to selected colleges, which include the University of Oregon and Oregon State college.

Mental examinations for both categories will be conducted by the Army Air Force boards at army recruiting stations.

Captain Rawls said one Salem boy already was awaiting the August 1 call under the Army Training Reserve program.

Hut Parts Start on Way to Tropics for Navy

Loading packaged and sections of Quonset huts manufactured by Oregon Pulp & Paper Co. lumber division for use of the navy in the tropics, L. E. Bates and Robert Dennis guide the crane load which A. F. Solte, standing below, started on its way to them. The company ships a carload a day from this factory on Front street in Salem.

Quonset Hut Sections Built in Salem Oregon Pulp and Paper Filling Navy Contract

Every day the lumber division of Oregon Pulp and Paper company (the former Spaulding Logging company) loads a car of neatly-packaged sections of Quonset huts for shipment to the navy.

At present, they are building sections for use in the tropics, so screens are employed to let in the breeze and to keep out the insects. The contract for this work has kept the saw and door section of the mill busy for several months, but will be concluded within a few more weeks.

The plant will not be idle, however, because it has a big contract for millwork for the navy hospital at Astoria, which will occupy the crew of 178 workers—over half of whom are women—for several months.

The Quonset hut has done duty for housing for the army and navy in nearly all climates. It is shaped like a semi-cylinder, with the curved portion constituting side-wall and roof combined. This is made of corrugated steel. The ends are of wood and the floor is of wood.

Oregon Pulp's contract is only for the ends. Other firms supply the corrugated steel and the wooden floors.

The end sections consist of a frame of 2x4 studding. At each side is a piece of plywood curved to match the roof-line.

The end sections are shipped "knocked down." Into each substantially built case go the frame studs, the plywood segments, the door, a roll of copper screening, a roll of canvas, and the necessary fittings.

The cases are filled on an assembly line and run right out to the car for loading.

Different size packages are made up for huts of different sizes. Cars are carefully loaded and steel bands are fastened to hold the cases in place. Boxcars were used at first, but it has been found that gondolas load faster and more easily so these are used now.

Last fall, Oregon Pulp was building boat cabins. It has also manufactured hundreds of grain bins for wheat growers.

All of these were orders to meet wartime demands. These contracts have provided steady employment for scores of workers and given an outlet for a great deal of lumber from the manufacturing division.

Cesspool Men Said Charging High Prices

Exorbitant prices have been charged by certain operators in and around Portland for cleaning out septic tanks and cesspools, and the Portland Better Business bureau working with the Oregon state board of health has forced these operators to virtually abandon the practice in the area.

In the ethics of good business, Lyle L. Janz, bureau manager, warns that these unscrupulous operators are attempting this same practice in other parts of the state, and householders are advised against employing such men.

Operators quote prices ranging from $7 to $15 per ton for materials removed and state that it will not run more than 2 1/2 to 3 tons at the most. The householder is later presented with a bill of $85 or more for cleaning the septic tank when in most cases the work was not required at all.

As the average private dwelling septic tank has a capacity of 500 gallons or less, that approximates not more than two tons of fluid sludge. Cost for cleaning should not exceed $35, Janz says.

Facts obtained from the Oregon state board of health about septic tanks include the report that the overflow from the septic tank is not pure and there is more bacteria in it than in raw sewage. It is not necessary to add yeast or similar materials to start bacterial action, as that action is automatically caused by bacteria in sewage.

The kitchen and laundry wastes from the ordinary household will not harm the action of

Teen Aged Youths Hold Oskee Party

A grand windup of a series of Oskee parties for high school age youths was held at the YMCA Saturday night with swimming, lobby games, stage show and dancing to the music of the Willamette Blues orchestra.

An overflow number of teen aged youths attended the final summer session while a large number of townspeople took in the festivities.

Novelty acts, including an acrobatic dance by Elaine Winkle; laughs at the antics of Stan Wilkes and Tom Grimm; the vocal numbers by tenor Vern Beach, Miriam Shellenberger and Geraldine Dea Georges, and a host of other features. Travis Cross was master of ceremonies.

Setting for the occasion was the gaily-decorated gym, complete with false ceiling and surroundings of spring flowers. The band stand was displayed with anchors. Tables were arranged in a semi-circle for those who wished to enjoy sandwiches, soft drinks or ice cream.

The Oskees will resume in September. They have been under the direction of the YM and YMCA staffs while student supervision for the summer has been done by Mary Lou McKay and Jean Fidler. Ruth Anderson and Bob Bennett were instrumental in the unique decorations.
