Fairham on Council — Dr. Silas E. Fairham, district superintendent of the Cascade district of the Oregon Methodist conference, has returned to Salem from Salt Lake City. He was one of the ministerial delegates to the recent jurisdictional conference held there and he was appointed as a member of a jurisdictional council to make a four-year study of the vital needs of the western jurisdiction, reporting in 1948. The council will study the area, which includes California, Colorado, Montana, Idaho, Wyoming, Washington, Oregon, Arizona, Alaska, Utah and the Hawaiian Islands so that the next conference may have a clear picture upon which to base any decision as to possible need for new bishops and new areas.

8% Paroled Brought Back Into Courts

Eight per cent of the persons paroled or placed on probation under surveillance of the state parole board last year were brought back into the courts and required to serve their sentences for technical reasons or for commission of a new crime, Joe Silver, senior parole officer for the board told Salem Lions club members Thursday noon.

Failure of either the individual or the community to make a place in the social scheme caused the backsliding of that eight per cent, 92 per cent went on to comparatively successful adjustment, Silver said.

Parole is not only a part of a sentence, it is a method whereby the individual who has offended society may be put back into society with a better chance for adjustment than if he were just "released" from penitentiary or training school, Silver declared.

Representatives of the parole board are constantly traveling over the state, keeping and building acquaintance with those in its charge, attempting to aid in the adjustment to normal living, he explained. Of the 826 person case-load carried by board workers, 623 are in Oregon and 89 in the armed forces; 351 came from the Oregon penitentiary, 295 are on probation without having served time; four were paroled from county jails and 176 are from other states, which have a reciprocal agreement with Oregon, the speaker explained.

Turnover Reported — Sheriff Burk's turnover report from the 1942 tax roll shows collections of $6581.76 of which $1081.27 goes to Salem school district and $464.64 to Salem city. Turnover of $854.25 from the 1943-44 roll shows $854.25 collected of which $104.36 goes to Woodburn-Hubbard drainage section, $25.95 to Silverton city and the balance distributed among county funds.
