Girls Given Wardrobe Advice By Textile Company Specialist

Putting into use where possible all discarded clothes practical for making over into usable garments for all family members will help greatly to overcome the textile shortage, according to Joan Frye, clothing specialist with the Spool Cotton company, during a demonstration meeting for 4H Clothing and Homemaking leaders and members in Salem.

By keeping clothes in good repair, storing and hanging properly, and making a clothing chart of needed garments for proper ensembles before any purchases are made will aid, not only the clothing conservation program but the person's own budget.

How to make over old garments into modern styles and men's suits into smart skirts, jackets, and hats was demonstrated by Miss Frye.

Suggestions for keeping clothing note books and more complete records of projects by the club members was an important feature of the meeting.

An explanation of the National Clothing Achievement contest, sponsored by the Spool Cotton company, was given by Helen Cowgill, assistant state club leader. All clothing club members 14 years old and with three years of club work are urged to fill out standard forms at once in order to take advantage of the fine training and awards offered by this state and national contest. Report blanks are obtainable for club members at the county club office.
