

Token Blues

New Game All Rage with Housewife Rules Are Outlined—Or Are They?

By Maxine Buren

So far it hasn't been given a name yet, but there's a new game that's all the rage, it's a sort of cross between "give away" checkers, monopoly and maybe with a little chess thrown in.

The general idea is to get rid of all your blue tokens before the first of October. But if you don't get rid of your blue men before September 17, you must get rid of them in multiples of ten, until October 1.

But in case you are playing partners (and you'd better be playing partners) you can pool the blue men with Aunt Mary or Cousin Jenny and use up the blues in multiples of ten.

Then you forfeit all the blue points you get caught with on October 1.

But (and here's where the monopoly part comes in), by the first of October they will have taken blue points off a lot of vegetables and other canned things, so what was the use of spending your blue tokens anyway, when you wouldn't have to use any up if you had waited until October 1?

According to the book of rules—but here's a direct quotation from the office of price administration, who made the rules. It's one of those questions and answer affairs and it "explains" all about why blue tokens will be retired on September 30.

Q. Why are blue ration tokens being retired?

A. Because, after September 16, they will not be needed as ration change.

Q. Why won't change be needed?

A. Because all processed food point values will be in multiples of ten, such as 10, 20, 30 etc., calling for one, two or three 10-point blue stamps.

Q. How is this possible when, in the past, point values seldom were in multiples of ten?

A. Because the number of processed foods with point values after September 16 will be relatively small, and because fewer container sizes are being used than before.

Q. What should I do with my blue tokens?

A. Use them as quickly as you can. You won't be able to get processed foods with them after September 30.

Q. If I have until September 30 to get rid of them, why should I use them right away?

A. Because between September 17 and September 30, you can use tokens only in multiples of ten. However, until September 16, you can use tokens in odd numbers.

Q. How may I use tokens between September 16 and September 30?

A. Only in units of ten.

Q. What if I don't have ten blue tokens. Will I lose the use of those I have?

A. No. OPA doesn't want anyone to lose points, so it has provided that you may pool fewer than ten tokens with a neighbor so as to make an even ten tokens.

Q. Suppose I buy an item worth 18 points on Saturday night, September 16, and give the grocer two 10-point stamps. Can I use the four blue tokens he gives me as change later?

A. Yes, if you pool them with someone else to make an even ten.

Q. Why can't red, meat-fat tokens be retired, too?

A. We still need red tokens because butchers can't cut meat in even pounds each time they serve you. Cuts of meat can't be standardized like cans of vegetable or fruit.

Q. Have tokens proved their worth?

A. Yes, many times. Grocers by their own estimates say ration tokens have saved them an average of three million dollars a month, chiefly by reducing the paper work required for rationing. Tokens speeded up shopping. In addition, had it not been for tokens, another ration book costing a million and a half dollars would probably have been needed by now. Volunteers have been spared the additional work required to distribute new books and housewives have been spared the trouble of applying for them.

Q. What will become of blue tokens after September 30?

A. They will find their way through ration banking channels to eight centers where they will be stored.
