Athletics to Be Secondary Now At Mt. Angel

MT. ANGEL, Dec. 14—Speaking at the Business Men's club this week, Father Method Korn, outlined plans and aims of the Mt. Angel college for the future. Saying he was carrying out the wishes and plans of Rt. Rev. Abbot Thomas Meier whose hope it was to make Mt. Angel college a school devoted to the highest Benedictine ideals, he said, "This means athletics will henceforth be secondary to scholastic learning, and scholastic learning will be secondary to the teaching of Christian principles."

"Religion will not be a question of correct answers to dogmatic queries but the building of a Christian character in each student. This is necessary to counteract the paganism which is seeping even into Catholic communities. The ideal of Mt. Angel college is to make each student look at everything through the eyes of Christ, judge things as Christ would judge them and act upon them as Christ would act."

better eating on postwar Earth

Mars slowly is being eclipsed: the planet Earth spins toward plenty. Many of the postwar predictions you hear belong in the realm of fantasy. But you can bank on this: perhaps the greatest single change in America's daily living will be effected by chests of below-freezing cold. Already thousands of Oregonians—who have always led the nation in the pioneering of new advances in electrical-living—have a foretaste of the new day of zero-plenty... they put their produce into commercial lockers or household freezing rooms and keep it fresh for months. But this is but the beginning. Wait until the world-famed specialties of Oregon's farms are completely prepared for the table and frozen rock-solid. Then, Americans will buy our turkeys roasted and zero-preserved, our lambchops broiled and then iced; to say nothing of our fruits and vegetables, all ready for heating and serving. In these days to come, every family will expect to have dual refrigerators: the conventional kind, plus below-freezing space. Appliance dealers and PGE, working together, have in the past won nationwide attention for their successes in promoting electrical living. Today this team stands prepared to bring you, as soon as conditions permit, the equipment for iced-plenty. You can be assured that operating costs will be low—for no other electric system in the entire U. S., either business-managed or politically-managed, delivers power over such a large area at average rates that (taxes considered) are so low.
