Service Men's Desires Heard At Lions Meet

When America's men return from the war, the civilian populace should have schools, jobs, businesses and work ready for them, Tracy Porter, former Salem teacher who is now engineer on a Matson C-type ship, told the Hollywood Lions club Wednesday noon.

Those who are not too old to return to classes will come back with a new vision of why they should learn more, Porter declared.

Quarters on his ship were described as good, food as excellent and conditions as much improved over those of 1936, a change he credited to union requirements. As far as regulations would permit, Porter told his route and conditions of his trip. The port in Hollandia where his ship stopped was described as well-equipped. Native villages were most primitive, but the natives accomplished much with their hands, he said; the jungle he found impressive, and he came away with the impression that soldiers in the area don't get sufficient credit.
