The Safety Valve

of self assurance, faith and intelligence. This quality has more than once gleamed out of the night that covers us. Yes, Salem was a wonderful city, and must be made even more wonderful.

If the world at home ponders the postwar scene, so even more the troops, the sailors and the marines ponder it.

"First," says they, "let's get home. Then let's return to the unfinished job of building the mighty west." It was said in pioneer days, "Give me men to match my mountains." Well, the men have more than matched them, they have moved them in the eternal search for the good life. Following this war we must move more mountains in that relentless struggle if necessary.

No, we don't care so much for helicopters and electronic frying pans and television — these are only cherries atop the sundae. What we — and we're sure you, too — want most is a return to steady progress, a return to development of the nobility of man. This cannot be achieved by grinning at the current magazine advertisements or by pushing buttons. This can be achieved only by a new sort of comradeship, a new sort of comradeship, and a universal wish to better our lives and our city's future.

Perhaps we sound a bit vague. Perhaps, you feel, we have merely set the stage for another fantastic dream—another New York advertisement—but in this article we promise the promotion of a feasible, sensible and necessary addition to the set of institutions which evolve Salem, the dream town in many a GI's heart.

How can we achieve this aforementioned unification? How can we knit ourselves together in a project more useful only to our children than to us? Here we have a plan.

What if the city as a whole was to awaken and wonder over a few existent problems and ask: Why are our children growing farther away from their parents? Why can't we instill in them the dream of the good life? Why have schools lost touch with parents, the church with youth, the student with the school? Each of these forces are working for the same ideals and yet they meet in the child much like three radio stations meeting on the same frequency. To wonder at this loss of unification is not enough, when this lost quality can be regained.

Let us consider the possibility here set forth by a group from the Salem high school class of 1942 — our last year in cordis and loud sweaters and bowties. We believe that at one time Salem entertained the idea of constructing a civic center and it was an amplification of this idea that started us. Suppose such a structure was erected—a unifying center where parents, children, teachers and ministers could meet, work and play together along coordinated lines. How many postwar problems would be eradicated if there was such a place where these four could mingle, study and produce together.

How could the various institutions of our area fit into the picture? First of all there is the city schools. The center could afford outlet for all children in all age groups of our school system. They could here develop knowledge, appreciation and self expression through art, music, drama, public speaking, sociology and political science. Its facilities could be trained toward them in teaching discipline, human conduct, and practical skills.

Lebanon Mills Reopen Today

LEBANON—The local plywood mill closed for a 46 hour vacation. Though the logging camps will not begin operations for another two weeks a sufficient inventory of logs will enable the mill to continue during the logging vacation. The Crown Willamette paper mill which closed Saturday afternoon resume again Tuesday morning.

The Lebanon Lumber company vacation of a week is from Tuesday, December 19 to Tuesday, Dec. 26. The Powers-Davis Lumber Co. closed from the Thursday before Christmas to the Tuesday after. Practically all logging operations have closed down. Beaver Creek and Snow Peak logging stopped a week ago. The Roaring River and Hammond company camps suspended operations this Saturday. Extensive overhauling of machinery is underway during the interval.
