Salem First Aiders Handle Heavy Load in 1944; Most Injuries From Noon to 6 p.m.

By S. Boyd Hillen
Staff Writer, The Statesman

More men than women get injured accidentally and the most accidents occur in the six-hour period between noon and 6 p.m., the annual report of first aid as summarized by Capt. P. L. Clark, indicated today.

Making 1040 calls in 1944 in the Floyd McMullen Memorial car the first aiders gave emergency treatment to 400 men, 270 women and 323 children. The rate was higher than in 1943 when 358 men, 245 women and 275 children were treated.

Of the calls made in 1944, the emergency men found 28 persons dead on arrival; in 1943 there were 17. Seizures, most of which are heart attacks and strokes, totaled 75 the past year, as against 69 the previous year. Nine persons attempted suicide in 1944, one succeeding, while in 1943 six tried and two succeeded.

The past year saw 424 accidents in the home, as against 356 in 1943. The home provided the greater portion of mishaps the past two years, with falls leading, 190 in 1944 and 197 in 1943.

Traffic furnished fewer accident victims than most categories, 34 pedestrians being treated after being injured by moving cars; 70 persons were treated after being injured in car wrecks. The axe, an Oregon tool, provided 34 victims of the past two years. "Long handled axes get them," Captain Clark said.

Other accident causes and the number of victims follow: accidental poison, 10 in 1944, 16 in 1943; gunshot wounds, five in 1944, three in 1943; fractures 82 and 98; dislocations eight and nine; serious cuts, 188 in 1944 and 217 in 1943; in schools 31 in 1944 and 14 in 1943; wringers, 13 and 11; burns 49 and 37.

The most ticklish job of the first aiders is the removal of objects from the flesh of victims of whom there were 54 in this category. These include splinters, metal and wood, fish hooks, crochet needles, pins in the throat, cinders in eyes. The complete job covered in the items listed, the memorial ambulance traveled 3874 miles and used 408 gallons of gasoline. The first aiders treated, on the side, 183 persons who "walked in" with injuries.

The work is divided between two crews. One is operated by Capt. P. L. Clark and Harvey Reinke, driver, and the second crew by Acting Capt. A. M. Bloom and Merle Cross, driver. The service is a Salem fire department project under direction of Fire Chief Harry R. Hutton.

Aristotle mentions a woman who had five children at a birth four times in succession.
