Byron Palmer Rites Pending Official Word

ALBANY, Jan. 9.—Funeral services for Byron Palmer, 22, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Palmer of Albany, who was killed in a bomber crash at Whiddy Island, Wash., Friday night, Jan. 5, have not been set yet. The Fortmiller Funeral home will be in charge of the services.

Byron was born in Albany, May 7, 1923, and had always lived here until inducted in the service. Graduated from Albany high school in 1942, he enlisted in the U. S. naval air corps in September of that same year, reporting from Portland to Corpus Christi, Texas, for preliminary training. From there he was sent to Norman, Okla., and later to air gunnery school at Purcell, Okla. Later he was assigned to the Jacksonville, Fla., operational gunners' school, graduating in March, 1944, with the rating of aviation gunner, third class.

From Jacksonville, Palmer was transferred to Seattle and Whiddy Island, where he had been stationed since last April. Being a gunner and a bombardier, he was stationed in the very nose of the fuselage at the time of the fatal accident, his parents have learned.

Surviving besides his parents are two sons, Mrs. Glenn Junkin of Albany, and Mrs. Neva Rochford of Seattle; and two uncles, Arthur Palmer and Leslie Palmer, both of Albany.

Mercury Leaves City Dads Fret

SILVERTON—Chief of Police Al Amo received 192 inquiries during the month of December, he reported Monday.

Trouble has been reported at the city disposal plant by youths climbing over the fence and riding the arm on the distributor. Mercury has been removed from the balance in the arm and is difficult to replace. Thirteen pumps are needed and it costs approximately $6.50 a pound, H. C. McCrea, city manager said. Councilman C. H. Dickerson expressed the opinion the disappearing mercury might account for some of the shiny new mercury-covered pennies seen about town.

The fire department was called out to the Goodall home on Wall street to check a fire but Goodall with the assistance of neighbors had it under control. The chimney fire burned a hole in the roof and was first noted by Roy Davenport, city mailcarrier, who turned in the alarm.

Woodburn Man Retires To Grow Filberts On Suburban Ranch

WOODBURN—Theo Shell, who has been operating a variety store here for the last 10 years has sold his store to Dean Bishoprick and will retire. Shell expects to devote more time to his 40 acre filbert orchard a mile and a half south of Woodburn on the highway.

He will continue to live in Woodburn, however, and the orchard will be in charge of a manager as it has been for some time.

Bishoprick has been manager of the First National bank of Portland, Woodburn branch, coming here from Gresham several years ago.
