Down to Earth

Builders Suggest Practical Ideas For Post-War Home Construction

Below are listed what builders have come to think are requisites of thoroughly modern postwar homes. It is noteworthy that builders coming down to earth with ideas for new homes, and are swerving comfortably away from the threatened "miracle home", with its fantastic gadgets and so-called "improvements for living".

If builders continue to improve with their ideas, women may after all be able to have new homes with considerable comfort and attractive appearance, with closets and even some practical rearrangements of working space.

Here are 15 features which the "Practical Builder" magazine lists and planned for new postwar homes: Look for gradual evolution of new American modern styles (not modernistic), with modifications dictated by climates. One-story houses will grow in popularity. In general, however, there will be little change in appearance. Good pre-war design will prevail; lines will be simple; decoration conservative.

Design will be from inside out, rather than fitting a layout within in a fixed interior. There will be more living in less space. Larger lots, due to desire of owners for rambling type of homes.

Basements will continue popular, except in warmer climates. Kitchens will be larger, with definite dining space. More storage space. Design will be for more comfortable overall working conditions, instead of mere "step-saving."

Bathrooms to gain greater utility with cabinets, built-in dressing tables, etc. Tendency is toward "departmentized" bathrooms, which give two-bathroom efficiency in less space and with more economy.

Dining room will shrink; in some localities merged with living room.

Living room will get special attention for increasing its livability features. Built-in furniture, nooks, niches, etc.; more natural light through larger windows; window arrangement to draw into living room the best outdoor setting.

ed; all year air-conditioning for average home still to come. Panel or radiant heating expected to increase. Windows will be larger, in some rooms reaching possibly to the floor to gain benefit of outside view. Fluorescent lighting to eliminate glare and heat radiation; indirect lighting; more thought to placing lighting where needed; flush ceiling panels. Better lighting in basements. Complete protection against weather; weatherstripping, storm shaft, insulation, moisture barriers, caulking. More mirrors; maybe in every room, to give air of spaciousness. Garage a definite part of the house, attached directly or, where money permits, connected by breezeway. Oversize garage for storage space where house has no basement.
