

Oregon Will Cooperate on Curfew Rule

City, county and state officials Monday assured representatives of the war manpower commission of their cooperation in enforcement of the new midnight closing edict which went into effect last night.

Enforcement of the new regulation will be handled jointly by local officers and federal agencies. Gov. Earl Snell, State Police Supt. Charles Pray, Mayor I. M. Boughton, Chief of Police Frank Minto and Sheriff Denver Young agreed. Law enforcement officials will report violations to W. H. Esillie, manager of the U. S. employment service office here and war manpower commission representative, who will investigate to determine whether the non-compliance has been willful.

If so, Esillie has been authorized to reduce the violators' employment ceiling to the minimum. Failure on the part of the non-complying operator to reduce his labor force to the specified minimum would result in invocation of further penalties by the USES WMC staffs in cooperation with other federal agencies such as the war production board, it was said.

Under the order, nothing but food will be served after midnight in any restaurant or other establishment and no coin-operated or other amusement devices may be played after that hour. In Salem, bowling alley operators and concerns which have served beer until one a. m. are most affected. Theatre operators said only long shows have run after midnight and declared they would adjust pre-midnight theatre hours so that even employees can be out of their establishments by 12 o'clock.

J.D. Hannaman Member of Heroic Crew

A copy of a story carried in the 8th army airforce newspaper, based on an interview with pilots who returned following the mission from which First Lt. James D. Hannaman failed to return on January 10 has been received by Mrs. Hannaman, 390 East Washington st.

The B-17 plane of which Lieutenant Hannaman was co-pilot was on fire and the crew continued to fly over the target to drop their bombs rather than break out of formation, crew members in the other plane said.

Capt. Richard Parry, commanding the formation in its assault on a communication center at Dusseldorf, Germany, supplying front line German troops, said "Some people would call it devotion to duty, but to us it was plain guts. Flak got the plane just as we went into the target. I could see the flames licking back from the engine. When I glanced back again the left wing was wrapped in flame. They hung onto their bombs and stayed in formation. When we reached the target the wing looked like a giant bonfire, but they got their bombs on the objective. Every man in the formation was hoping for a miracle to put those flames out. Then they pulled away and started down. We will never forget their courage."

Mrs. Hannaman has received letters from the commander of the unit and the chaplain, but so far nothing is known of the fate of the crew members. Mrs. Hannaman, the former Lila Murray, and their two children are living with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Murray.

January Bad Month for Traffic Deaths

Twenty-seven persons were killed in traffic accidents in Oregon in January—the heaviest for that month on recent records, Secretary of State Robert S. Farrell said Saturday.

Eighteen of the 27 were pedestrians, most of them elderly, and the greater number of such accidents occurred in hours of darkness, Farrell said in urging that pedestrians recognize the fact that at times drivers are unable to see them until only 40 or 50 feet away.

In another report, giving details of a previous compilation which showed 245 persons were killed in traffic accidents in Oregon in 1944, Farrell said the three high counties in this category were Multnomah, Marion and Clackamas.

Records of 1942, 1943 and 1944 in these counties showed fatalities as 75, 74 and 66, respectively, for Multnomah county; 21, 9, and 22; for Marion, and 14, 15, and 20 for Clackamas.

Other county fatality records for the same respective years: Benton, 6, 4, 2; Linn, 13, 8, 10; Yamhill, 3, 5, 5.

Greater Air Transportation Systems Following War End Predicted by UAL Official

Greater public air transportation systems, rather than considerably increased private ownership and operation of planes will feature the five years immediately following the war, John T. Standish, United Air lines district traffic manager, Portland, predicted as he spoke before the Salem Chamber of Commerce luncheon forum Monday noon.

Within a five-year period after the cessation of hostilities it should not be uncommon to leave an office in Denver when the 5 o'clock whistle blows and be in Los Angeles in time for a late dinner and an evening's entertainment, Standish said.

Trans-ocean flights will be brief; costs will continue to drop; safety will be a great factor and air transportation will be the safest form of travel; few trans-continental flights will require sleep accommodations because of the lessened hours of travel required, and loading and unloading equipment will be so speeded as to save much time, Standish declared.

There has been too much guesswork, too much exaggeration and not a little dreaming out loud in some of the aviation predictions, Standish intimated. His own company, he said, is preparing to use in the five years immediately following the war trans-continental planes which will carry as many as 100 passengers. But the talk of hotels on wings, carrying 500 persons together with bars, lounges, dining rooms and sleeping quarters is stretching a point for that particular era, he maintained.

Helicopters Coming Helicopters are coming, but their development is still in its early stages and to discuss landing fields on every roof or their use commercially is to depart from the practical, the speaker indicated. Jet propulsion has recently been used to carry a plane from Denver to Minneapolis at a speed more than four times as great as the 200 miles per hour which the immediate postwar commercial carrier will probably have, Standish said. Radar and other war-developed equipment will make possible all-weather flights.

Finer terminals, well-engineered air fields and speedy super-highway connections with cities may be anticipated in that period which follows the war, rather than construction of small ports in the centers of cities, Standish believes.

In the Capitol Limelight

Secretaries of pay-less senators will take pity on their bosses today by treating them to a noon dinner at the restaurant listed in the senate resolution as "The Quelle." The resolution, introduced Monday, termed the dinner a "subsistence meal," said the plan was introduced "in the interests of sound legislation" and the "salutary effect of good food" on dispositions; and declared it was necessary for the "immediate preservation of the public peace, health and safety." The resolution, "protects of Sen. (Thomas) Mahoney notwithstanding," provided that non-attendance would bring forfeiture of senators' postage stamp allotments to their secretaries.

The senate also got an injection of humor in the form of another resolution "to render unnecessary future bills." It mentioned complicated phraseology, called for introductions which would give the supreme court plenty of work in interpretation, and indirectly referred to repeated senate actions in eliminating the phrase "and/or" from house bills. The resolution's proponent was declared to be Handy Andy (the term which Sen. W. H. Strayer of Baker linked with Assistant Secretary of State Harry Schenk in a recent argument on a salary increase bill).

Henry Aiken, Heppner, chairman of the democratic state central committee, spent Monday in the legislative halls here as a guest of Senator Lew Wallace, democratic national committeeman from Oregon, and other legislators and state officials. Courtesies of the senate were extended to Aiken at the forenoon session.
