Project Manager of Salem Alumina Plant Tells C of C About Operational Plans

Clay from Castle Rock, Wash., will be the first raw material to go through the Salem alumina plant when it commences its pilot operations, Warren R. Seyfried, project manager, revealed to Salem Chamber of Commerce members and guests at their Monday luncheon meeting.

Speaking before the chamber forum, Seyfried explained the delays in equipping the plant on Cherry avenue, north of Salem, and urged his listeners to realize that rumors of "shut-downs" are to be anticipated once the plant has commenced its experiments.

The formula to be used here is based on a German patent and a variety of innovations are represented in the Salem plant, he explained. Because it is a pilot plant, designed to test the practicability of the method of removing alumina from clay, it is very likely to cease operations frequently while adjustments are made, Seyfried said.

Just because the plant is an experiment and because it was built with federal funds is no reason why its operations are not to be undertaken seriously, he declared. Both the Chemical Construction corporation, contract en-
