

Air Medal For Valor Given Cronemiller

Lt. Donald O. Cronemiller, copilot of a B-25 Mitchell bomber, in the Mediterannean theatre of war, has been awarded the air medal for proficiency in combat, according to word received from the headquarters of the 12th Air Force.

The citation, by Maj Gen John

K. Cannon, reads: "For meritorious achievement, while participating in aerial flight as co-pilot of a B-25 type aircraft, during an attack on military objectives at Arilla, Italy, on 28 December, 1944. today at Salem high school with a full day of screening examinations scheduled for several score 17-year-olds, deemed tentatively eligible for radio technician training. Similar preliminary screenings will extend to an additional. 25 high schools included in the Salem area, it was said.

An ever-increasing demand for radarmen, by units of the fleet, surface craft and submersibles, as well as by divisions of the navy's air-arm, prompted the unprecedented campaign for qualified young men, according to Mel Kennedy, recruiter in charge of the Salem recruiting sub-station. A major contributing factor to the growing need for more radarmen, is the large number of fighting ships and planes coming from commissioning docks and assembly lines as construction yards and production in an all-out effort to supply Pacific combat fleets with the critical materials of amphibious warfare

Training Valuable

"The navy needs men for radar training," Kennedy said. "Needs them right away, men who are keen, intelligent, quick to learn. Men who can qualify may consider themselves extremely fortunate, because of the unlimited postwar possibilities of this amazing new science.
